PREFACE.

Whoever reflects that the decisions of our legislators affect the fate of empires,—that upon their breath rests all that is dear to freedom and religion,—that their acts may involve us in all the horrors of civil discord, or plunge the kingdom into a calamitous war, and thereby expend the blood and treasure of the nation,—will not hesitate to conclude that their proceedings must be pregnant with interest, and the publication of every thing connected with them, to be a most desirable object.

If it be true, then, that “our property, our liberties, and our lives are in the hands of the senate,”—and that it is true, no one, we are persuaded, will venture to deny—how essentially necessary it is that all who desire the well-being and prosperity of their country, and the stability of its Constitution, should be thoroughly acquainted with all that relates to that august assembly: in order, that by their united and exerted influence and intelligence, it may no longer be an assembly of small and particular interests, but that it may form a body of men who represent the interests and intelligence of the nation, who sympathise with them, and who can fairly call upon them to support their burthens in the future struggles and difficulties of the country, on the ground that those who ask them for that support, are joining heart and hand with them, and, like themselves, are seeking only the glory and welfare of England. And more especially is such information necessary at the present day, when treacherous designing men are disseminating error, and disregarding the restraints of order and religion, scruple not to mislead and excite the ignorant, and traduce and belie those whose talents they envy, and whose virtues they will not imitate.

The same spirit which led the humble and uneducated to enter the fields of natural and experimental philosophy, is now animating many ardent minds to explore the arcana of statistics. Opposition to the rapidly-increasing spirit of inquiry, and the ardent desire for information on political subjects which now pervades all classes, from the peer to the peasant, would be unwise and unavailing. We, therefore, uninfluenced by party views, and unprejudiced by political connexions, advance to cherish and assist the impulse, by presenting to the public a work, which will serve as an interesting and valuable text-book, to those who wish to possess a Standard National Political Record.

INTRODUCTION.

THE affairs of a people, like those of a person, are subject to all the contingencies of hesitation, indecision, and caprice. That such should be the fact, may seem almost to militate against the proverb which says that "in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom"; but that such is the fact, all history of popular proceedings will abundantly testify.

There is, indeed, one point of difference between the situation of a person and that of a people, which when duly considered, may not only serve to account for this apparently strange fact, but may even enable us to go a step further, and say that the affairs of a people administered upon popular principles, are a great deal more subject to these contingencies than those of a person. The person, the individual, has but a simple duty to perform: he has an occupation to follow whereby he must live, and support those who may be dependent upon him; or he is born to affluence, and his duty then is to study how he may so employ his time and privileges in his exalted station, as to leave an honourable example worthy of imitation. In either of these cases all depends, certainly, upon the character of the person, whether such duties be well or ill performed, or be not performed at all. There are individuals who hesitate so much and decide so little, and are so completely the slaves of caprice, that the wonder is how they contrive to get through the world at all; but fortunately for them, it happens that common sense is the staple commodity of this world, and if they cannot take care of themselves, there are others both capable and charitable enough to take care of them. Such cases, however, constitute the exception to the general rule.

But the people, when called upon to exercise a judgment and a voice in the administration of their common affairs, are placed in a very different case from that of a person who has simply his own individual affairs to attend to; for of the great mass of persons who constitute that people, how few are capable by natural endowment, by education, or by study, to understand principles of government, or to exercise a sound discretion in any matter which requires enlarged and comprehensive views of those particular interests, the sum and substance of which constitute the general interest.

Here is one cause of the animosities, the vacillations, the inconsistencies so frequently betrayed by the people in the exercise of popular rights. But it is not the only cause: those persons who are least capable of judging for themselves are just the most likely to be imposed upon by others, who really know what they are about, but have purposes of their own to serve. Such persons may be very readily persuaded to recognise in the mere name and colour of a political party, the true and exclusive marks whereby all that is good and great in one candidate for their favour, is to be distinguished from all that is base and abominable in another.

One party maintains that all power resides in the people at large;—flattery is very pleasant, and the people are flattered. Another party contends that power should reside in the hands of the few;—such doctrine carries insult to the many upon the very face of it, and the many are offended accordingly. An intermediate party halts between these two extremes of opinion; and like the man with the ass trying to please every body, pleases nobody; or like the ass itself between two bundles of hay, is supported by neither, but gradually wastes itself away, amidst cruel derision and contempt, into a state of helpless inanition. Professions, high-sounding professions, meanwhile abound: they cost nothing and are easily made; the turn once served, they are just as easily forgotten. But periods of time come round when these professions have to be tried by the test of experience; and how little soever a person may be able to judge prospectively of the soundness or the unsoundness of an abstract theory, most persons are acute judges as to whether they have practically experienced benefit or injury from their encouragement of such theories, or their faith in such professions. Disappointment in this particular produces reaction; and when another Election arrives, although no change of respective merit may have occurred, yet the party colours change their relative positions on the Poll.

Considerations and reflections of this nature first induced the Compiler of the present volume to turn his particular attention to the Analysis, or rather the Anatomy of Contested Elections, and in the course of his researches he collected a mass of materials, which, it occurred to him, might not be thought unworthy of preservation for the purpose of permanent and general reference. It would be both wearisome and invidious to point out particular instances in support of his views: they are not so sparingly scattered through the following lists as to need very minute research. It is not necessary that he should avow his own party in politics by way of justification of these views: any individual of any party in turn may amuse himself, at a little cost of time and trouble, with the agreeable employment of selecting out confirmatory examples from the ranks of his opponents.

Great care has been taken to render this work as accurate as possible, but notice of any error will at all times be thankfully received by the Publisher, together with any hints for improvement in his comprehensive undertaking to form a Standard Political Index.

The Editor having completed his exertions, the duty now remains to be discharged of presenting his most sincere thanks to those highly distinguished Gentlemen who have rendered their valuable assistance during the progress of the work, and have thus enabled him to submit it with greater confidence to the public.

HISTORICAL

Origin of The British Senate,

AND

ITS PROGRESSIVE CHANGES TO THE PRESENT TIME.

HISTORIANS inform us that the Britons derived their origin from the Gauls or Celtæ, about one thousand years before the Christian era. Their manners and customs, language and government, all being the same, are a strong indication of the truth. The original name of our island was Albinn: inn was the Gaelic term for a large island, alb anciently signified white; as Britain presented to the people on the opposite coast its chalk cliffs, the term Albinn, or White Island, was applied to it. The word Britain, has had various interpretations given it. Britin, the barbaric term from which the Greeks and Romans named Britannia, was the name of the inhabitants, and not of the island; the termination inn, which has so much perplexed Camden, and other able antiquaries, is only the sign of the plural, according to the usual mode of declension in the Gaelic tongue, and Brit signifies merely the divided or separated. The Britin, therefore, were the separated people, or the emigrants from Gaul into Albinn.

The Albinns or Britons were a barbarous people, divided into many small nations or tribes, whose sole property was their arms and cattle, while the arts of peace were unknown. Wars formed the chief occupation, and the principal object of ambition among the people : thus our ancestors remained in a rude, though independent state till within fifty-five years of the Christian era, when Cæsar, the great Roman conqueror, landed at Deal, and subdued them, and then returned to Gaul ; but, as Tacitus remarks, he rather showed the Romans the way to Britain, than actually put them in possession of it.

The Britons valiantly resisted the invaders for one hundred and thirty-three years, when they were finally conquered by the famous Julius Agricola, in the seventy-eighth year, (during the reign of Vespasian,) who introduced laws and civilization among the Britons, taught them how to provide the necessaries of life, reconciled them to the Roman language and manners, and gradually incorporated them as a part of that mighty empire. During the reign of the Roman emperors, such a profound tranquillity prevailed in Britain, that little mention is made of it by the historians ; being disarmed, dispirited, and submissive, they had lost all desire of their former liberty and independence. In this state of vassalage they remained for four hundred and three years, when the Romans withdrew their legions for the defence of their own empire, in the year 348.

We are not informed what species of civil government the Romans had left among the Britons, but it appears probable that the chief men assumed a kind of regal authority over their own immediate districts, and lived in a great measure independent of each other. In this defenceless and divided state they were ill prepared for fresh invaders. The Picts and Scots who dwelt in the northern parts beyond the wall of Antoninus, made numerous incursions upon their peaceable neighbours, who being repeatedly defeated, and reduced to despair, deserted their habitations and fled to the mountains.

In this extremity, the Britons sent into Germany a deputation to invite over the Saxons for their assistance and protection.

The invitation was accepted ; Hengist and Horsa, two brothers who possessed great credit among the Saxons, and were much celebrated for their valour and nobility, found it easy to persuade their countrymen to embrace the enterprise ; they landed about the year 449, in the Isle of Thanet, and immediately marched to the defence of the Britons against the northern invaders, who were unable to compete with the valour of these auxiliaries.

The Britons hoped to enjoy their triumph in peace under their new allies, but the Saxons perceiving their weakness, sent for a reinforcement of five thousand men, and on their arrival they formed an alliance with the Picts and Scots, and proceeded to open hostility against the Britons, whose ancient valour appears to have been rekindled against those treacherous invaders. They made a noble resistance, and after one of the most arduous and protracted struggles ever recorded in history, were at last defeated.

In this manner the natives being overpowered or entirely expelled, seven kingdoms were established in Britain, which have since been well known by the name of the Saxon Heptarchy. But, by a variety of fortunate contingencies, in the year 827, all these seven principalities fell under the power of Egbert, who was crowned King of all England.

This circumstance had a decisive effect upon the future destinies of our island. The principles of freedom by which they had been actuated on the shores of the Baltic, they proudly enforced on their own behalf when they became the masters and possessors of Britain, and these principles, repressed or expanded according to the course of events, have continued to be the animating spirit of our national institutions to the present day.

The first British Parliament on record was termed "Kyfr-y-then",—the Assembly of the Thanes or Lawgivers. It was, however, only in the reign of Alfred that the Saxons first established the blessings of a domestic government by dividing all England into counties; these counties he subdivided into hundreds, and the hundreds into tithings. Every householder was answerable for the conduct of his family and all who resided with him for above three days; ten neighbouring householders forming one corporation, under the name of a tithing or friebourg, were answerable for each other's acts, and any man under the name of a tithing-man, headburg, or borsholder, was appointed to govern. Every man who did not register himself in some tithing, headburg, or borsholdership was punished as an outlaw, and before any man could change his house, he must obtain a certificate from the borsholder of the tithing. The Kyfr-y-then, Thanes or lawgivers, was changed to that of "Folkmote", or general meeting of the people, which took place occasionally, at the beginning of the calends of May, to consult "of the common safety, of peace, of war, and of promoting the public profit"; and was also frequently convened, on any sudden emergency, by the earls, aldermen, or borsholders of every county. Alfred, justly called the Great, also laid the foundation of English liberty and independence, by the institution of trial by jury, and the introduction of what is called the common law; and to him we are indebted for the commencement of that marine which has been the glory and bulwark of England. Her powerful navy has often frustrated the designs of her most inveterate enemies, and given stability as well as honour to the British throne, amidst the general wreck of European governments.

History states that, at all times and in all the kingdoms of the Heptarchy, there was a national council called a "Witten- agemote", or assembly of wise men, (for that is the import of the term,) whose consent was requisite for enacting laws, and for ratifying the chief acts of public administration; the preambles of all the laws of Ethelbert, Ina, Alfred, Edward, Ethelred, and Edward the Confessor, even those to the laws of Canute put this matter beyond controversy, and give proofs in abundance of a limited and legal government. The Wittenagemote was a council called by the prince, on affairs of state and difficult points of government, which the laws of the commons, or Folkmote, did not allow him to decide or carry into execution upon his own authority. The members of the Wittenagemote being accountable to the Folkmote, the laws of the former were subject to the revision and control of the latter, and null and void unless confirmed by the Folkmote, which was virtually and really the voice of the people. The Wittenagemote was the conservative, the Folkmote the legislative body; the one proposed the aids and taxes required by the state, the other fixed and assessed the amount.

Six centuries elapsed from the invasion of the Saxons till the Norman conquest, in the year 1066. Upon the conquest of England by the Normans, the government of the Saxons was terminated; the legislative assembly composed, as before, of freemen, in conjunction with the followers of the conqueror, then received the appellation of the "Council of the Commons". This arrangement was of short duration, for the people complaining of the favour shewn to his followers, he introduced the feudal law, and dispossessed the English and Saxon freeholders of their lands, and bestowed them upon his Normans; and in lieu of the Wittenagemote, Folkmote, and Council of the Commons, substituted a Council of his own Barons, introducing at the same time the language, laws, and customs of Normandy. The Great Council of the Barons met at least three times a year.

The supreme legislative power of England, under the feudal Parliament, was lodged in the King and Great Council. The English and Saxons remained in this state of vassalage for one hundred and forty-eight years, when they threw off the yoke, and passed the great boon of liberty, called "MAGNA CHARTA", in the reign of John, about the year 1214, which granted or secured very important liberties and privileges to all orders of men in the kingdom. On the English nation the charter has undoubtedly contributed to bestow the union of establishment, with improvement to all mankind; it set the first example of the progress of a great people for centuries, in blending their tumultuary democracy and haughty aristocracy with a fluctuating and vaguely-limited monarchy, so as at length to form these discordant materials into the only form of a free government which experience had shewn to be reconcilable with widely-extended dominions. Whoever in any future age or nation may admire the facility of the expedient which converted the power of taxation into the shield of liberty, by which discretionary and secret imprisonment was rendered impracticable, and portions of the people were trained to exercise a larger share of judicial power than ever was allotted to them in any other civilized state, in such a manner as to secure instead of endangering public tranquillity: whoever exults at the spectacle of enlightened and independent assemblies, which, under the eye of a well-informed nation, discuss and determine the laws and policy likely to make communities great and happy: whoever is capable of comprehend in all the effects of such institutions, with all their possible improvements upon the minds and genius of a people, is sacredly bound to speak with reverential gratitude of the authors of the great charter. To have produced it, to have preserved it, to have matured it, constitutes the immortal claim of England on the esteem of mankind.

Her learned Bacons and Shakspeares, her Miltons and Newtons, her Pitts and Foxes, her Burkes and Cannings, and a host of other illustrious individuals, with all the truth which they have revealed, and all the generous virtue which they have inspired, are but of inferior value when compared with the subjection of men and their rulers to the principles of justice ; if, indeed, it be not more true that these mighty spirits could not have been fostered except under equal laws, nor roused to full activity without the influence of that spirit which the charter breathed over their forefathers.

King John died two years after this great event, and Henry the third succeeded, at the age of ten years, under the regency of William, Earl of Pembroke, under whose fostering care the privileges of the charter were carried out, and extended so as to facilitate the attainment of further improvements, which gradually took place during Henry's reign ; the principal additional privilege was the foundation of our representative form of government.

In the forty-ninth year of this reign, writs were issued for summoning knights of counties, citizens, and burgesses to meet in Parliament ; the manufacturing, trading, and commercial part of the community, not being deemed of sufficient importance to be represented separately. For in the course of a century and a half, the Norman chiefs on whom William had bestowed all the lands, gradually lost their property and influence, while the English and Saxons by their industry, acquired sufficient wealth and consideration to justify their claim of electing representatives from their own body ; this was granted about the year 1268. They were not permitted to sit with the Barons, who still retained their privileges as Peers, but a separate chamber was appropriated for their meeting. Their powers were great, for they had the right of negating any bill originating in the Council of the Barons, the Peers reserving to themselves the same power in respect to any enactment made by the Commons, and this, with various modifications and improvements since made, was the origin of the present Parliament of King, Lords, and Commons. The powers of the Parliament were indeed for some time vague and unsettled, and its organization was at first, as might have been expected, extremely imperfect. But in the reign of Edward I. the English government began to be conducted with greater regularity, and our constitution assumed a more definite form, an improvement for which we are indebted to the progress of civilization and the diffusion of property. These Parliaments were held annually. In 1589 a bill was passed termed the Triennial Act, which provided that a new Parliament should be called every three years.

The government, in the reign of Elizabeth, established monopolies and granted patents for exclusive trade,—a plan so pernicious, that had it continued for many years, the enterprising spirit of England, the seat of riches, and arts, and commerce, would have been reduced to a level with Morocco, or the coasts of Barbary; yet notwithstanding these discouragements, the spirit of the age was strongly bent on naval enterprises, and many new branches of foreign commerce were opened by the English. In the year 1600, the East India Company commenced their prosperous and powerful auxiliaries; the Queen obtained an exclusive patent from the Czar for the whole trade of Muscovy; and encouraged by these privileges, the English merchant, with his characteristic spirit, boldly persevered until he crossed the Caspian sea, and thus opened a commerce for his manufactures into Persia. These enterprises produced wealth which gave an additional lustre to the reign of the Queen, while they increased the power of the people, which formed a bulwark round their newly-established representative system, which was called into action in the reign of James,—when, by their virtue and talents, they displayed a firmness in resisting the encroachments of the crown, at a time when its prerogative was considered supreme, and the Commons only an ornament to the fabric without being in any degree essential to its being or existence, which justly entitles them to the admiration of a grateful posterity. In this prosperous state commenced the reign of Charles I. in the year 1625 ; he summoned his Parliament in the same year. The Duke of Buckingham was a great favourite with the young Prince, and his influence approached to supremacy over the modesty of Charles. His vehement temper prompted him to raise suddenly to the highest elevation his flatterers and dependents, and upon the least occasion of displeasure, he threw them down with equal impetuosity and violence. Implacable in his hatred, fickle in his friendships, all men were either regarded as his enemies or dreaded soon to become such ; the whole power of the kingdom was grasped by his insatiable hand, while he both engrossed the entire confidence of his master, and held invested in his single person the most considerable offices of the crown. This power was the chief cause of a spirit of resistance by the Commons, who, possessing a strong power in the legislature, with a patriotic spirit determined to support and defend their newly-acquired privileges against the encroachments of the crown.

This led to a series of struggles, and finally to the overthrow of Charles, and changed the monarchy into a Commonwealth, in 1649. A military and despotic republican government was now formed which elected Oliver Cromwell its Protector or Chief, possessing the whole power civil and military of the three kingdoms. The republicans were better qualified for acts of force and vigour, than for the tedious and deliberate work of legislation. The power of England had never been so formidable as in the time of the Commonwealth ; her numerous and well-disciplined army struck terror into foreign nations. Their civil polity was a series of egregious impolitic despotism which led to commotion and anarchy. Harassed with convulsions and disorder, Englishmen ardently longed for the restoration of their lost privileges : the passion for liberty having been carried to such violent extremes, and having produced such bloody commotions, began by a natural movement to give place to a spirit of loyalty. When Cromwell died, his son Richard seized the reins of government, but they instantly dropped from his feeble hand—the general voice called for the restoration of the Monarchy, and Charles II. returning from his long exile, was received by his people with the most ardent enthusiasm, and placed on the throne of his ancestors in 1660.

The sudden and surprising revolution which restored him to his regal rights had also restored the nation to peace, law, order, and true liberty, and no prince ever obtained a crown under more favourable circumstances, or was more blessed with the cordial affection and attachment of his subjects. The forms of the constitution were revived, the hierarchy resumed its dignity: the House of Lords was restored, the Commons were restricted to their ordinary functions, and the convention changed to that of Parliament. As men are ever prone to run into extremes, so on this occasion they allowed the Crown too much power, by repealing the Triennial Act, which provided that a new Parliament should be called every three years, and the summoning of Parliaments was left entirely to the discretion of the King. When, therefore, he had once assembled a body of senators sufficiently obsequious to his views, he was not in haste to change them, hence he allowed his celebrated Long Parliament to sit about eighteen years. The dissatisfaction of the people became so oppressive that he dissolved it in 1681. During his reign the celebrated Habeas Corpus Act was passed, by which personal liberty is secured to the subject.

But the perfection of the British constitution was completed in 1688, when James II. was hurled from the throne for his arbitrary principles, the right of Parliament to regulate the succession to the crown established, and the liberties of the people secured by the Bill of Rights, and the Act of Settlement. In this Bill it was expressly declared "That the pretended power of suspending laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of Parliament, is illegal ;" every mode of levying money upon the subject by mere virtue of the royal prerogative was pointedly condemned. It was also laid down as a fundamental principle, that the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any other place or court out of Parliament. It was also declared that the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with the consent of Parliament, is against law ; and even in time of war, the maintenance of a military force was afterwards rendered entirely dependent upon the authority of Parliament. These are the principal provisions of the Bill of Rights, which, though it may well be denominated the palladium of British liberty, prescribes no new limitation of the prerogative but merely asserts those great principles of constitutional law which are to be collected from the practice of the best times.

A vacancy of the throne being thus declared, they immediately proceeded to fill it by devolving the succession upon the Prince and Princess of Orange. By this measure they deviated as little from the lineal course of inheritance as was consistent with the general safety, and gave as little countenance as possible to the principle of elective monarchy.

In the reign of Anne, Scotland was united to England, and thenceforward represented by one Parliament. About the year 1707, a Bill was passed which made all future Parliaments Septennial. Ireland continued to have a separate Parliament until the reign of George III., when a union was effected in 1800, during the administration of Mr. Pitt; and it was declared by the articles that "There shall be one Parliament, styled the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland." In 1829 the Catholic Relief Bill passed, which admitted persons professing the Romish faith into the House of Commons. William IV. ascended the throne in 1830, at which period there was a great commotion for an alteration of the franchise and an extension of the suffrage; and after much opposition the Reform Bill was carried by the administration of Earl Grey, (A. D. 1832,) by which the decayed and deserted boroughs lost their right of sending members to Parliament, and the privilege was transferred to the larger counties and more important towns.

Our present Queen Victoria I. succeeded to the throne on the demise of her uncle, 20 June, 1837, since which no important change affecting Parliament has occurred.

The Constitution of England, that structure of which we boast, and which foreigners so much admire, is formed of three distinct parts, and the union of these parts produce that happy combination of monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical Government, which was considered by ancient writers to be a theory beautiful in perspective, but incapable of realization. Nothing could be more fitted on the one hand to guard against the abuse of delegated power, and on the other to restrain the excesses of popular tumults, than the British Constitution. To each branch originally was given its proper share in that legislative union, which by combining all interests, made Britain great, rich, free, and happy. One of its chief excellencies is its capability of adapting itself to times and seasons, and the ease with which an alteration is effected, without injuring or undermining the strength or beauty of the majestic structure itself.

AN EXPLANATORY ACCOUNT OF
THE PARLIAMENTARY FORMS AND REGULATIONS
OF
The House of Commons.

No member can sit or vote in the House under twenty-one years of age.

A Member is elected Speaker (or Chairman) of the House, whose prerogative it is to keep order by enforcing the rules.

Discussions generally arise on a motion made by a Member seconded by another, and then put from the Chair in the shape of a question: on each of these every Member is entitled to be heard once, but may rise again to explain, and the Member who originates the motion is allowed to reply.

Committees are, first, those of the whole House, which may be to consider of certain resolutions, in respect to the nature of which considerable latitude prevails; or the House resolves itself into such Committee to consider the details of a bill, the principle of which is never discussed unless on its several readings. Or there may be Committees for financial purposes, as those of "Supply," or "Ways and Means."—Secondly, there are Select Committees, chosen by ballot or otherwise, for some specific purpose; the Members composing such body seldom exceed twenty or thirty Members: occasionally these are declared Committees of Secrecy.—Thirdly, Election Committees, which are strictly judicial tribunals, and whose duty it is to try the merits of controverted elections: these are always chosen by ballot.—Fourthly, Committees on private bills. When the whole House is in Committee, the Speaker vacates the Chair, some other Member is called on to preside, and he sits in the seat of the senior clerk. The mace is then placed under the table. For Committees of Supply and Ways and Means, there is a Chairman who receives a salary.

The Prorogation of Parliament is an act of the Crown, but either House may adjourn its sittings to any future day, as of course it may adjourn any debate. Motions of adjournment may be made at any time, and repeated at the pleasure of any Member.

When a motion has been made upon which the Members of the House are unwilling to come to a vote, there are formal modes of avoiding a decision, amongst which are passing to the "other orders of the day," or moving "the previous question." The former means that the House should—casting aside and taking no further notice of the matter then before it—proceed to the other business appointed for that day; the latter, that a vote be previously taken, as to the expediency of their coming to any decision on the question raised. If "the previous question" be decided in the negative, the motion on which it bears is then got rid of for the time; whereas, a direct negative to the motion itself, would be a proscription of it for the remainder of the session as well as a denial of its principle. Moving that a bill "be read this day six months," is a mode of throwing it out without coming to an express declaration against the principle of the measure.

If there are not forty Members present when the Speaker takes the Chair, he adjourns the House till the following evening.

It is the peculiar duty of the House of Commons to enquire into all national grievances and see them redressed. And, with respect to taxes, it is their indisputable privilege and right, that all grants of subsidies, or Parliamentary aids, shall begin with them, although such grants are not deemed effectual until they have the assent of the other branches of the legislature. The reason of this privilege which was conferred upon the Commons upwards of five centuries ago, is that as the supplies are levied upon the body of the people by them, it is proper that they alone should have the right of taxing themselves.

One of the most important rights enjoyed by the subject is that of petitioning the Parliament for redress of grievances. This right has of late years been much used, and as it is in perfect conformity with the spirit of the constitution, it ought to be highly prized and carefully guarded. Petitions may be presented from an individual, from trades, from corporate bodies, from religious communities, &c. The form in which petitions should be drawn up.—They should be couched in respectful language, and wholly divested of untruth, or false colouring. It is not necessary that they should be on parchment, but may be written in a fair and legible hand on paper in common use.

To bring a bill into the House, if the relief sought be of a private nature, a petition must first be presented, (by a Member, none else being qualified,) stating the grievance desired to be remedied; and if the petition be not opposed, then leave is given to bring in the bill. On public matters a petition is unnecessary.

The bill being brought in, by a motion made to the House, it is read a first time, and at a convenient period, a second time; after the second reading it is referred according to its importance, either to a Committee of the whole House, or to a few Members. When it has gone through this Committee, it is reported to the House who reconsider it and occasionally add amendments ; it is then ordered to be engrossed on long rolls of parchment, and sewed together. At the third reading amendments are sometimes made, and if a new clause be added to it, it is done by adding a separate piece of parchment to the bill, which is called a rider. The Speaker then puts the question whether the bill shall pass. If this be agreed to, it is carried to the Lords for their concurrence by one of the Members, who, attended by several others, presents it at the bar of that House, into the hands of the Chancellor, who comes down from his woolsack to receive it. If the bill be agreed to by the Lords without amendment, it remains with them, except in case of a money bill, which is sent back to the Commons. If the Bill be rejected by the Lords, no more notice is taken of the matter, in order that unpleasant discussions may be avoided. When the bill has passed the two Houses, and received the Royal assent, it is called "An Act."

An acceptance of "the Chiltern Hundreds" is a form which has now no other meaning than that the Member accepting resigns his seat. By an express Act of Parliament, no office having emolument attached, can be conferred by the Crown on a Member of the House of Commons without his thereby vacating his seat, and it is only thus that a Member can rid himself of the duties which any body of constituents may impose even without his consent ; the Crown, therefore, as an accommodation to the House at large, is always ready to confer on any Member "the Stewardship of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds," which office, when it has served his purpose, he immediately resigns.

A "Call of the House" takes place when very important questions are agitated ; which is calling the names of the Commons over, each Member answering to his own, and leaving the House in the order in which he is called. This plan is adopted to discover whether any Member be absent, or any person present who is not a member.

When a vacancy occurs in the House, the Speaker upon receiving a certificate, can cause notice to be inserted in the Gazette, but shall not issue his warrant until fourteen days after such insertion, when an Election shall take place forthwith, to fill up such vacancy.

The Privileges of both Houses are great :—That of freedom of speech stands the most conspicuous ; the statute of 1 William and Mary declaring that "the freedom of speech and debate, and proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any other place and court out of Parliament."

They have both the same power, conjointly with the Sovereign, of making, abrogating, repealing, and revising laws but in the Arraignment of any Peer of the Realm, Impeachments of the Ministers of the Crown, Writs of Error, and Appeals from the Decrees of the Court of Chancery, the Lords are sole judges. Both have protection from Arrest for Debt.

And any Peer or Prelate, by licence obtained from the Sovereign, may make another Lord of Parliament his proxy to vote for him in his absence.

The House of Commons exercises the important privilege of raising or withholding the Supplies, and has the power of impeaching public delinquents;—even the highest Lords in the kingdom, both spiritual and temporal.

The authority for summoning a Parliament is now vested in the Sovereign, or in her absence, the Custos Regno, or the Regent; and the place of meeting, wherever it shall be her pleasure to appoint.

The number of Members returned to legislate in the House of Commons, is as follows :—

The right of voting for Members of Parliament is given by the late reform act to leaseholders, in Counties, seised of lands or tenements worth ten pounds a year, to tenants at will, farming lands at a rent of fifty pounds a year, and to holders in fee-simple of lands or tenements of the yearly value of forty shillings. In Cities and Boroughs the right of voting is given to resident householders whose tenements are worth an annual rent of 10*l.*, but the rights of freemen in the old constituency are preserved for the term of their natural lives.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

NOTE.

The Elections commence with England, and are arranged alphabetically, shewing the population of each Borough according to the latest returns, the County in which it is situate, and in what reign the franchise was first granted. The names of the Unsuccessful Candidates are printed in Italics.

G. before the date signifies a General Election. The letters after the names indicate the political party which the Candidate supports, as c. conservative, w. whig, r. radical.

Where there are two columns of figures, the first gives the plumpers, and the other the total number of Votes polled for each Candidate.

* Mr. Edgeworth in his memoirs relates a whimsical anecdote respecting this Election; Sir Francis' Attorney's bill was not discharged, it had been running on for many years, and though large sums had been paid on account, a prodigious balance still remained to be adjusted. The affair came before the Court of King's Bench, when among a variety of exorbitant charges there appeared the following article :

" To being thrown out of the George Inn, Andover; to my legs being thereby broken; to Surgeon's bill, and loss of time and business; all in the service of Sir F. B. Delaval," £500.

When this curious item came to be explained, it appeared that the attorney had by way of promoting Sir Francis' interest in the borough, sent cards of invitation to the Officers of a regiment in the town, in the name of the Mayor and Corporation, inviting them to dine and drink his Majesty's health on his birth day. He at the same time wrote a similar invitation to the Mayor and Corporation in the name of the Officers of the regiment. The two parties met, complimented each other, ate a good dinner, drank a hearty bottle of wine to his Majesty's health, and prepared to break up. The commanding Officer of the regiment made a handsome speech to Mr. Mayor, thanking him for his hospitable invitation and entertainment; " No Colonel," replied the Mayor, " it is to you that thanks are due, by me and my brother aldermen for your generous treat to us." The Colonel replied with as much warmth as good breeding would allow: the Mayor retorted in downright anger, vowing that he would not be choused by the bravest Colonel in his Majesty's service. " Mr. Mayor," said the Colonel, " there is no necessity of displaying any vulgar passion on this occasion. permit me to show you that I have here your obliging card of invitation." " Nay Mr. Colonel, here is no opportunity for bantering, there is your card." Upon examining the cards, it was observed that, notwithstanding an attempt to disguise it, both cards were written in the same hand, by some person who had designed to hoax them all. Every eye of the Corporation turned spontaneously upon the attorney, who of course attended the meeting, his impudence suddenly gave way, he faultered and betrayed himself so fully by his confusion, that the Colonel in a fit of summary justice threw him out of the window; for this Sir F. B. Delaval was charged £500.

* BRISTOL ELECTION, 1774.

At the opening of the Poll, the Candidates were Lord Clare, Mr. Brickdale, the two last Members, and Mr. Cruger, a considerable merchant at Bristol. On the second day of the Poll, Lord Clare declined; and a considerable body of gentlemen, who had wished that the City of Bristol should at this critical season, be represented by some gentleman of tried abilities and known commercial knowledge, immediately put Mr. Burke in nomination. Some of them set off express for London to apprise that gentleman of this event, but he was gone to Malton in Yorkshire. The spirit and active zeal of these gentlemen followed him to Malton. They arrived there just after Mr. Burke's election for that place, and invited him to Bristol.

MR. BURKE'S SPEECH AT HIS ARRIVAL AT BRISTOL.

GENTLEMEN,—I am come hither to solicit in person, that favour which my friends have hitherto endeavoured to procure for me, by the most obliging, and to me, the most honourable exertions.

I have so high an opinion of the great trust which you have to confer on this occasion; and, by a long experience, so just a diffidence in my abilities to fill in a manner adequate even to my own ideas, that I should never have ventured of myself to intrude into that awful situation. But since I am called upon by the desire of several respectable fellow-subjects as I have done at other times, I give up my fears to their wishes. Whatever my other deficiencies may be, I do not know what it is to be wanting to my friends.

I am not fond of attempting to raise public expectations by great promises. At this time, there is much cause to consider, and very little to presume. We seem to be approaching to a great crisis in our affairs, which calls for the whole wisdom of the wisest among us, without being able to assure ourselves that any wisdom can preserve us from many and great inconveniences. You know I speak of our unhappy contest with America. I confess it is a matter on which I look down as from a precipice. It is difficult in itself, and it is rendered more intricate by a great variety of plans of conduct. I do not mean to enter into them. I will not suspect a want of good intention in framing them. But however pure the intentions of their authors may have been, we all know that the event has been unfortunate. The means of recovering our affairs are not obvious. So many great questions of commerce, of finance, of constitution, and of policy are involved in this American deliberation, that I dare engage for nothing, but that I shall give it, without any predilection to former opinions, or any sinister bias whatever, the most honest and impartial consideration of which I am capable. The public has a full right to it; and this great city, a main pillar in the commercial interest of Great Britain, must totter to its base by the slightest mistake with regard to our American measures.

This much, however, I think it not amiss to lay before you ; That I am not, I hope, apt to take up or lay down my opinions lightly. I have held, and ever shall maintain to the best of my power, unimpaired and undiminished, the just, wise, and necessary constitutional superiority of Great Britain. This is necessary for America, as well as for us. I never mean to depart from it. Whatever may be lost by it, I avow it. The forfeiture even of your favour, if by such a declaration I could forfeit it, though the first object of my ambition, never will make me disguise my sentiments on this subject.

But, I have ever had a clear opinion, and have ever held a constant correspondent conduct, that this superiority is consistent with all the liberties a sober and spirited American ought to desire. I never mean to put any colonist, or any human creature, in a situation not becoming a free-man. To reconcile British superiority with American liberty shall be my great object, as far as my little faculties extend. I am far from thinking that both, even yet, may not be preserved.

When I first devoted myself to the public service, I considered how I should render myself fit for it ; and this I did by endeavouring to discover what it was that gave this country the rank it holds in the world. I found that our prosperity and dignity arose principally, if not solely from two sources ; our constitution and commerce. Both these I have spared no study to understand, and no endeavour to support.

The distinguishing part of our constitution is liberty. To preserve that liberty inviolate, seems the particular duty and proper trust of a member of the House of Commons. But the liberty, the only liberty I mean, is a liberty connected with order and virtue, but which cannot exist at all without them. It inheres in good and steady government, as in its substance and vital principle.

The other source of our power is commerce, of which you are so large a part, and which cannot exist no more than your liberty, without a connection with many virtues. It has ever been a very particular and favourite object of my study, in its principles, and in its details. I think many here are acquainted with the truth of what I say. This I know, that I have ever had my house open, and my poor services ready, for traders and manufacturers of every denomination. My favourite ambition is to have those services acknowledged. I now appear before you to make trial, whether my earnest endeavours have been so wholly oppressed by the weakness of my abilities, as to be rendered insignificant in the eyes of a great trading city ; or whether you choose to give a weight to humble abilities, for the sake of the honest exertions with which they are accompanied. This is my trial to-day. My industry is not on trial. Of my industry I am sure, as far as my constitution of mind and body admitted.

When I was invited by many respectable merchants, freeholders, and freemen of this city, to offer them my services, I had just received the honour of an election at another place, at a very great distance from this. I immediately opened the matter to those of my worthy constituents who were with me, and they unanimously advised me not to decline it. They told me they had elected me with a view to public service ; and as great questions relative to our commerce and colonies were imminent, that in such matters I might derive authority and support from the representation of this great commercial city ; they desired me therefore to set off without delay, very well persuaded that I never could forget my obligations to them, or to my friends, for the choice they had made of me. From that time to this instant I have not slept ; and if I should have the honour of being freely chosen by you, I hope I shall be as far from slumbering or sleeping when your service requires me to be awake, as I have been in coming to offer myself a candidate for your favour.

* When the Writs for a new Parliament were issued, a meeting was convened, at which it was resolved to invite Mr. Jefferys again to become a Candidate to represent them, and to support his re-election. Mr. Jefferys accepted the invitation, and going down in pursuance thereof, his entrance into the city was unhandsomely opposed, a riot ensued, and Capt. Barlow of the 1st Dragoon Guards happening to be there, in consequence of his regiment being stationed in the neighbourhood, he exerted himself with much spirit to quell the riot, and protect Mr. Jefferys and his friends from insult. Capt. Barlow was in consequence called on to join Mr. Mr. Jefferys as a Candidate, which he readily accepted, the show of hands at the hustings was in their favour, and both were triumphantly returned.

 TO THE ELECTORS OF THE EASTERN DIVISION OF THE COUNTY OF CUMBERLAND.

GENTLEMEN,—The approaching dissolution of Parliament will give to you an opportunity of exercising your judgment on my public conduct, and to me an occasion gladly embraced, of vindicating my adherence to the principles which I have uniformly professed, and still steadily maintain.

I first claimed your support as the friend of civil and religious liberty, as the enemy of abuses whether in Church or State, but as the firm supporter of the prerogative of the Crown, the rights of the Church, and the independence of the House of Lords, which I have ever held to be no less sacred than the privileges of the Commons and the freedom of the people; for I have been always deeply persuaded that the mixed form of Government under which we live is the happiest and the best, because it ensures and promotes in the highest degree the peace, the concord, and the welfare of every class in the community.

True to these principles while I have been your representative, I have had my share in carrying the repeal of the Test Act, the Emancipation of the Catholics, the Reform in the Representation of the People, the Abolition of Slavery, the Commutation of Tythe, the Amendment of the Poor Laws, Municipal Reform in England and Scotland, a large diminution of the public expenditure, and a corresponding remission of the public burdens.

These are the measures, with one or two exceptions, which Her Majesty's present Ministers claim as their own, and which they prefer as their title to public confidence ; yet the success of these measures in a large proportion is due to the administration of Lord Grey, under whom I had the honour of serving ; and out of office I have been the supporter of the small portion of these measures which Lord Melbourne's Government has accomplished in three long weary sessions of an unproductive Parliament.

But though friendly to every amendment of the law within the limits of the constitution, I have resisted changes which appear to me inconsistent with the balanced form and spirit of our Government, and I have had the satisfaction of supporting Her Majesty's Ministers during the session now about to close, in their resistance, always timid, and sometimes doubtful, to what is termed by themselves organic change ; and specially in their opposition to the repeal of the Septennial Act, to the expulsion of the Bishops from the House of Lords, to a further extension of the suffrage, and to vote by ballot.

My support of the Government has extended thus far ; my opposition has been limited to certain dangerous measures, pressed on the Ministers by their Roman Catholic and Dissenting followers, which, in my opinion, tend directly to the overthrow of the Protestant church.

I have ever been the friend, I am so now, of perfect religious liberty and of the largest toleration ; but the connexion between the Church and State, and the strict maintenance of our reformed Protestant establishments, involves interests of paramount importance, which I cannot overlook, and which I dare not betray.

My conduct in defence of the national churches, and in opposition to republican innovations, is now submitted to your decision. If you approve it, I can only promise to serve you as I have hitherto done ; if you condemn it, I shall be consoled even for the loss of your favour by the conscious purity of my motives ; but until a majority on the poll shall have decided against me, I will not believe that I have forfeited your confidence, when my heart assures me that I still am worthy to be one of your representatives.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your faithful and obliged servant,

J. R. G. GRAHAM.

nor my principles can be suggested by the most malicious of my enemies as the cause of my defeat. You have long known me, and the reception I have ever met with from you, and the efforts I have unceasingly made to promote your interest and your independence, seemed to me to ensure my success against a Candidate who is so much a stranger to you, that few of you have ever learned his name. Gentlemen, he is an equal stranger to me, and therefore I am not at liberty to suppose that upon a better acquaintance with his character and principles, you will not be satisfied with them. I wish Mr. Manning joy of him as a colleague, and I would wish you also joy of him as your representative if I could believe him to be the true object of your independent choice; but there is too much reason to believe that he has been forced upon you, and that his success is not the result of your voluntary efforts, but a real trial over your independence. Be this as it may, I sincerely wish he may prove upon trial as faithful a friend to you as I have been, and as independent a member of Parliament; and if he should hereafter be found to be a man worthy of your approbation, I wish for his sake as well as yours, that he may never be defeated against your will by another stranger. Gentlemen, I return you who have supported me, and you who wished to have supported me, my most sincere and grateful thanks. The only service I can now render you is to submit your rights, as electors, to the consideration of a committee of the House of Commons.

I am, as I ever have been, Gentlemen,

With all possible respect, your faithful servant,

H. HOWARTH.

* The constitution of this borough is said to be excellent, being vested in the mayor, freemen, and freeholders resident in the borough, and paying scot and lot. In 1734, 1761, and 1768, the mayor, who is the returning officer, declared that he would not permit any persons to vote who had freeholds conveyed to them for the occasion; this, in 1734, was restricted to the term of six months, and in 1761 and 1768, to the period when an opposition was first known. At the general election in 1806, the three candidates could not agree in the choice of an assessor to the returning officer, in which extremity, a gentleman educated for, but who had not practised at the bar, consented very reluctantly, and at great inconvenience to himself, to act for two days; at the end of which period, General Norton and Messrs. Cranby, Onslow, and Sumner consented to the nomination of Mr. Serjeant Onslow. Previously to this, the gentleman alluded to, in conformity to the precedents already cited, and for the purpose of preventing occasional votes, commonly termed fagot votes, on either side, advised the mayor to admit no freeholders created posterior to the 10th of September, which was the day on which Mr. Sumner made his first public canvass, but Mr. Peake, Mr. Marriott, and Mr. Knapp, the counsel for the three candidates, having all objected to the proposition, each case was agreed to be considered separately according to its merits. This was the longest and most strenuous contest ever known in Guildford, in which borough the families of two celebrated speakers have always possessed great influence. The number of voters in Guildford, although the elective franchise does not extend over more than half the town, now exceeds 250. The celebrated Algernon Sidney stood as candidate for this borough, and the speakers Norton and Onslow have both sat for it.

* This county has experienced two great struggles for representation, one in 1790, and the other in 1806. On both occasions the freeholds of Portsmouth, Portsea, &c have decided the contest; under Tory and Whig governments, it cost the ministerial candidates on each occasion £25,000, and the opposite party £3000.

HELSTON.

Cornwall. Edward I. Pop. 3298.

The elective franchise was formerly invested in a corporation, consisting of a mayor, who was the returning-officer, eleven aldermen, and twenty four common councilmen, in all 36.
 In 1790 there was only one elector alive under the old charter of Elizabeth, conferred by Charles I., and it fell to his lot, according to common report, to nominate two representatives.

The family of Osborne, Duke of Leeds' influence has prevented any hope of success by contesting against their power.

 TO THE ELECTORS OF THE BOROUGH OF HUDDERSFIELD.

GENTLEMEN.—The attempt which, at the request of a numerous and respectable proportion of your body, I was induced to make, with every prospect of success, to effect the Independence of Huddersfield, has, by the undue exercise of the dominant Influence opposed to us, and by the withdrawal of a Party whose Support was originally tendered to me, been defeated.

To such of you as have honoured me with your support, or had intended so to have done, if means had not been employed to deter you; and also to those of your fellow-townsmen, who, though not voters, have been equally anxious for the success of our common cause, and have zealously endeavoured to promote it, I beg leave to offer my most grateful and sincere thanks.

In conclusion, I can truly assure you, that I feel more pride in being thus defeated in our honest effort to liberate this newly-created Nomination Borough from Whig thralldom, than I should have experienced in the most signal triumph purchased at the price of your Independence.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your faithful and obliged servant,

* Mr. GIBSON announced his acceptance of the Chiltern Hundreds, and his reasons for that step, in the following letter:—

TO THE ELECTORS OF IPSWICH.

GENTLEMEN,—Having taken a calm review of the course which my convictions have recently compelled me to adopt in the House of Commons upon several important occasions, and feeling, on reflection, that my sentiments on many great questions are so much at variance with those of the Conservative party as, if acted on, to approach an infringement of the general understanding on which it was doubtless considered by many I was returned to Parliament, I have thought it my duty to accept the Chiltern Hundreds, and thus to afford my constituents an immediate opportunity of placing the important charge of their representation in such hands as they may think proper.

Though I have not received any requisition to resign, and no such step might in any case be taken, yet I could not be conscious that this forbearance ought, perhaps, to be attributed to some delicacy of feeling in my former supporters, or to their conviction that a proceeding of this kind would be opposed to the acknowledged general principles of their party; and, at all events, that it could not be regarded as any test of the absence of dissatisfaction on their part with my Parliamentary conduct.

Highly, therefore as I prize the honour of a seat in the House of Commons, and deeply interested as I feel in the faithful discharge of public duty, it does, nevertheless, appear to me that the time is now come when I shall act more in conformity with the spirit of those high moral obligations, which are paramount to all other ties, either in private or public life, by making a voluntary surrender of the trust which has been committed to my charge.

I have the honour to remain, Gentlemen,
 Your obedient humble servant,

* Mr. Samuel Thornton who had exerted himself greatly in behalf of the commercial interest of this town, failed in this contest, and like many of his predecessors in defeat, the ex-M.P. could not account for the ungratefulness of his late constituency. And in 1807 one of his relatives declined an invitation from a numerous body of voters, in consequence of the expectations said to be formed on the part of some of them, in respect to the usual donation, after the time for presenting petitions had expired: this, or something very near it, was at least asserted by the gentleman in question, in a public advertisement.

* KNARESBOROUGH ELECTION.

MR. POWELL, the Returning Officer, having read the writ for returning a Member in the room of Lord Brougham.

MR. P. DIXON briefly proposed Lord Waterpark as a fit and proper representative of the borough; and the motion was seconded by Mr. H. EDWARDS, of Market Weighton.

PETER EARNSHAW, Esq. proposed John Entwisle, Esq., amidst loud cheers.

B. ROTCH, Esq. seconded the nomination in an eloquent and spirit-stirring speech. He denounced the close borough system, and declared that Lord Waterpark had no claim to the confidence of the inhabitants except being a relation to the patron of the borough. ("No, no," from his Lordship.) Mr. Rotch begged pardon; he should say a connexion, and the Noble Lord would not deny that. He had not even solicited their suffrages; he had not addressed them by letter or word of mouth; he had done nothing in fact, but act the part of the nominee of the Duke of Devonshire. (Cheers.) "It may be," continued Mr. Rotch, "that his Lordship is relying upon his splendid talents, and thinks he can run away with your sense, but he who thinks he can address the people of England, without addressing their good sense, is mistaken. (Cheers.) I beseech you, if they gain a temporary victory to-day, be not dismayed. There must be an appeal elsewhere, and doubt not but in the end Mr. Entwisle will be your representative. Mr. Entwisle is a gentleman of fortune, a magistrate of the West Riding, and beloved by hundreds who live near him, and will flock round him on his return. I pray you return him, and be not defeated by trickery. Listen to our opponent's pretensions and see if they equal Mr. Entwisle's, who says, I come to emancipate your borough, return me, and you shall be free." (Loud Cheers.)

The show of hands was greatly in favour of Mr. Entwisle.

Mr. DINMORE wished to know, if Lord Waterpark was an orator or a dumb-bell?

Lord WATERPARK demanded a poll.

A long discussion arose as to the way of voting; when it was agreed that twenty-five votes should be offered for Mr. Entwisle, and twenty for Lord Waterpark—merely to give the former a nominal majority. Twenty-three of Mr. Entwisle's voters were objected to by Mr. Powell, jun., agent to the Duke of Devonshire; amongst them was Mr. Rotch, who said, I tender my vote as holder of a burgage, under a lease that does not contain any reservation to the superior lord of the right of voting. The others were of a similar description. The objection, which was held good by the Returning Officer, was that of not being a freehold burgess, paying a rent to a superior lord.

Mr. BLANSHARD was proceeding to argue the question, when an arrangement was made to let this question go to the Commons' Committee. Twenty persons tendered their votes for Lord Waterpark, in the right of freehold interest in burgage tenements.

Mr. BLANSHARD objected to these votes:—amongst them was Mr. Wilson, of Bolton Bridge, who, on being cross-examined, said he claimed his right of voting by holding a deed. He did not know the contents of the deed, and never saw the burgage-house. He only received the deed that morning, and expected to deliver it up after the election. Mr. Blanshard objected to all the votes, which were given under similar claims, as having the taint of occasionality, and the voters not being burgage holders.

The RETURNING OFFICER over-ruled the objections, and declared Lord Waterpark duly elected.

* TO THE ELECTORS OF LEEDS.

GENTLEMEN.—It is well known to you that the great Corporation to which Parliament has entrusted the Government of our Indian Empire has appointed me to one of the highest posts in its service; that his Majesty has been graciously pleased to confirm the appointment; that I have accepted it; and that in a very short time I shall proceed to the scene of my new labours.

I have lately enjoyed the pleasure of conversing with several of my most respected constituents, and I have been truly gratified to learn that my conduct on this occasion has obtained their approbation. They justly consider it as honourable to themselves that their representative should be freely selected, by a body which wants neither the spirit nor the power to resist unreasonable dictation on the part of the Crown, to fill one of the most important offices in the Empire.

I trust that I shall carry with me the esteem of my constituents, and that, in my new situation, I shall not forfeit that esteem. In Asia as in Europe, the principles which recommended me to your favour shall be constantly present to my mind. While legislating for a conquered race, to whom the blessings of our constitution cannot as yet be safely extended, and to whom the benignant influence of our religion is unknown, I shall never forget that I have been a legislator chosen by the the unforced and uncorrupted voices of a free, an enlightened, and a Christian people.

I this day return into your hands the high trust with which you have honoured me. It was obtained by no unworthy arts. It has been used for no unworthy ends. I owed it to your free and unsolicited choice. I have endeavoured to employ it for what appeared to me to be your real good. My conscience tells me that I have been an honest servant: and I owe to you this attestation, that you have been most indulgent and reasonable masters. You will bear me witness that I have never shrunk from speaking the truth: and I can bear witness that you have always been willing to hear it. When we have differed, I have never evaded your questions, nor have you clamoured down my answers. We have endeavoured to convince each other by a fair interchange of reason, and if we still continue to differ, we have differed as friends.

I can form no better wish for your Borough,—and it is well entitled to the best wishes that I can form,—than that it may maintain the honourable character which it has won. If, now that I have ceased to be your servant, and am only your sincere and grateful friend, I may presume to offer you advice which must, at least, be allowed to be disinterested, I would say to you.—Act towards your future representatives as you have acted towards me. Choose them, as you chose me, without canvassing or expense. Encourage them, as you encouraged me, always to speak to you fearlessly and plainly. Never suffer your great and independent town to be turned into an East Retford or a Newark. Reject, as you have hitherto rejected, the wages of dishonour. Defy, as you have hitherto defied, the threats of petty tyrants. Never forget that the worst and most degrading species of corruption is the corruption which operates not by hopes, but by fears. Cherish those noble and virtuous principles for which we have struggled together, the principles of liberty and toleration, of justice and order. Support, as you have steadily supported, the cause of good government: and may all the blessings which are the natural fruits of good government, descend upon you and be multiplied to you an hundred fold. May your manufactures flourish: may your trade be extended: may your riches increase. May the works of your skill, and the signs of your prosperity, meet me in the farthest regions of the East, and give me fresh cause to be proud of the intelligence, the industry, and the spirit of my constituents.

And now, Gentlemen, it remains for me only to bid you farewell,—to wish to you all, to my supporters and to my opponents, health, prosperity, and happiness, and to assure you that to the latest day of my life I shall look back with pride and pleasure on the honourable connection which has subsisted between us.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your faithful friend and servant,

* CONCLUSION OF SIR W. MOLESWORTH'S SPEECH ON THE CANADA QUESTION.—22nd December, 1837.

SIR W. MOLESWORTH. ——— Should, however, a war take place, I must declare that I should more deplore success on the part of this country than defeat; and though, as an English citizen, I could not but lament the disasters of my countrymen, still it would be to me a matter of much less poignant regret than a success which would offer to the world the disastrous and disgraceful spectacle of a free and mighty nation succeeding, by force of arms, in putting down and tyrannising over a free, though feebler community, struggling in defence of its just rights. May such a calamity be averted! May such a reproach never fall upon this country! But if, unhappily, a war does ensue, may speedy victory crown the efforts of the Canadians, and may the curses and execrations of the indignant people of this empire alight upon the heads of those Ministers, who, by their misgovernment, ignorance, and imprudence, involve us in the calamities of civil discord, and expend our national resources in an unholy struggle against liberty! And then——

[Loud cries of "Order, order!"]

Mr. C. LUSHINGTON. — I would appeal to the Chair whether such language as the Honourable Baronet has used is proper for the House to hear?

Mr. HUME.—I rise to order. I claim for every Honourable Member of this House full and free liberty of speech, to express his sentiments upon this or any other question, whenever he may think proper to do so, the language always being fitting to the occasion; and I maintain that no man should dare to interrupt him.

SIR W. MOLESWORTH.—I will not trouble the House further.

* TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT FREEMEN OF LIVERPOOL.

Liverpool, October 21, 1812.

GENTLEMEN,—The poll being now happily closed, and your choice of me confirmed by a majority (in itself, I am assured, great beyond example) of a larger number of freemen than ever before came forward to give their votes at an election for Liverpool, I have to offer you, with the most sincere and heart-felt delight, my acknowledgments and congratulations: my congratulations on the signal victory obtained by your ancient and unquestionable principles; my acknowledgments for your having selected me as the humble individual in whose name that victory should be won.

The triumph, Gentlemen, has been a triumph of principles, not of persons. Therefore as it is, on the one hand, the more glorious and the more important, so it is, (as I hope,) on the other hand, less likely to be accompanied or followed by any of those unpleasant feelings or recollections which too often embitter election contests, and which carry the division of public sentiment into the recesses of private life.

Between my opponents and myself there has not been, during the whole of the conflict, one moment of anger, or one word of altercation. We were opposed to each other on public grounds; and we parted good friends when the contest was decided.

It will be a satisfaction to me to see, before I quit this town,—it is a satisfaction to have seen already,—all the temporary heats of the struggle fast subsiding, and likely soon to be forgotten.

Gentlemen, I hope I need not assure you, that the principles for which you have chosen me will remain the principles of my political life; and that they will be applied to the measures and circumstances upon which I may have to give an opinion, as your representative, in Parliament, according to the best of my judgment; unfettered by connexion with any subsisting party, or by attachment to any living leader. In the exercise of that judgment I shall, indeed, be aided by the fond and faithful remembrance of Mr. Pitt; from whose side, when living, I never was separated, whether in or out of office; and the recollection of whose opinion has, since his death, been, next to my own conscience, the most constant guide of my public conduct.

Gentlemen, in the worthy colleague whom you have been pleased to associate with me, I know I shall find that intimate acquaintance with your local interests and wishes which will supply the defects of my inexperience on those subjects. I feel assured of his cordial co-operation, and he, and you, may rely upon my readiness to co-operate cordially with him in all your concerns.

With every sentiment of respect and of gratitude for a reception so distinguished, and a trust so honourably conferred,

I remain, Gentlemen,

GENTLEMEN,—I have just learnt that I have this day been proposed, in a manner equally unexpected and flattering to me, as a Candidate to represent the City of London in Parliament; and that I had the honour of having my name returned on the show of hands. It is impossible for me not to feel the warmest gratitude and satisfaction in receiving so distinguished a mark of confidence from so great and respectable a body. It is the more honourable to me, as I can attribute it only to

* On the 26th of June, when the house was in committee on the Corn Laws, he stated "that the circumstances of the times required alterations and changes in the regulations and restrictions imposed on the corn trade in 1791. The value of money had undergone a depreciation of $13\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; the poor's rate had experienced an increase of three millions since 1783; the price of labour and of the instruments of husbandry had advanced one-third: the committee, therefore, had delivered in a report, by which the import was to be regulated by the average of the twelve maritime counties." He then moved the propositions, and afterwards carried the bill founded on them through its various stages.

* JOHN WILKES, M.P. FOR MIDDLESEX.

Dr. Franklin was in London during the violent ferment which was occasioned by Wilkes' election for this county in 1768, and he thus speaks of the political agitations of this remarkable period :—" 'Tis really an extraordinary event to see an outlaw and exile of bad personal character, not worth a farthing, come over from France, set himself up as a candidate for the capital of the kingdom, miss his election only by being too late in his application, and immediately carrying it for the principal county. The mob spirited up by numbers of different ballads, sung or roared in the streets, requiring gentlemen and ladies of all ranks as they passed in their carriages, to shout for ' Wilkes and Liberty ' ; marking the same words on all their coaches with chalk, and ' No. 45,' on every door, (the famous No. of the ' North Britain,') which extend a vast way along the roads into the country. I went last week to Winchester, and observed that for 15 miles out of town there was scarcely a door or window-shutter next the road unmarked, and this continued here and there quite to Winchester, which is 64 miles."

The united efforts of the Court, Ministers, and Parliament were exerted to prevent Wilkes from sitting as a member of the House. This occasioned the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Common Council, and Livery of the City of London to frame their celebrated remonstrance to the King, declaring it to be " a violation of the constitution to deprive, at their will and pleasure, the County of Middlesex of one of its legal representatives, elected by a majority of the freeholders." The King refused to accede to their remonstrance, considering it disrespectful to his Royal person, injurious to Parliament, and irreconcilable to the principles of the Constitution. The censure passed by the King was fortified by approving addresses from both Houses of Parliament. The citizens, nothing daunted, resolved on presenting a second remonstrance, couched in still more energetic terms : to this, his Majesty's sentiments remained the same. The Lord Mayor, (Beckford,) then made the following unpremeditated, but noble reply :—

" MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN.—Will your Majesty be pleased so far to condescend as to permit the Mayor of your loyal City of London, to declare in your Royal presence on behalf of his fellow-citizens, how much the bare apprehension of your Majesty's displeasure would at all times affect their minds. The declaration of that displeasure has already filled them with inexpressible anxiety, and with the deepest affliction.

Poll open 15 days.

Permit me, Sire, to assure your Majesty, that your Majesty has not in all your dominions, any subjects more faithful, more dutiful, or more affectionate to your Majesty's person and family, or more ready to sacrifice their lives and fortunes in the maintenance of the true honour and dignity of your Crown.

We do, therefore, with the greatest humility and submission, most earnestly supplicate your Majesty, that you will not dismiss us from your presence without expressing a more favourable opinion of your faithful citizens, and without some comfort, without some prospect at least of redress.

Permit me, Sire, further to observe, that whoever has already dared, or shall hereafter endeavour by false insinuations and suggestions, to alienate your Majesty's affections from your loyal subjects in general, and from the City of London in particular, and to withdraw your confidence in and regard for your people, is an enemy to your Majesty's person and family, a violator of the public peace, and a betrayer of our happy Constitution, as it was established at the glorious revolution of 1688."

The Lord Mayor waited nearly a minute for a reply, for some "more favourable opinion," but none was given at that time, but eventually the citizens succeeded, in spite of the united efforts of the Court, the Ministers, and the Parliament; and their cause has since been solemnly and universally recognized as that of the Constitution and of liberty. It is impossible to appreciate too highly the national importance of the conduct which they pursued. We may well say with Junius, that "the noble spirit of the metropolis is the life-blood of the state, collected at the heart, from that point it circulates with health and vigour through every artery of the Constitution."

The Lord Mayor received the thanks of his fellow-citizens for his able and dignified speech; his reply was ordered to be inserted in the City books, and afterwards at his death, on a monument erected in the Guildhall to his memory.

 TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE BOROUGH OF NEWARK.

GENTLEMEN,—The resignation of Sir William Henry Clinton having occasioned a vacancy in the Representation of this most respectable Borough, I take the earliest opportunity of becoming a Candidate for the high distinction of representing you in Parliament.

G. 1830. H. Willoughby . . . c. 775	February 1831. vice Willoughby.
M. T. Sadler . . . c. 746	W. F. Handley . . . c. 833
Thomas Wilde . . . w. 652	Thomas Wilde . . . w. 517
	Charles Wilkins . . . r. 2

Not having the honour of being personally known to many of you, it becomes me on this occasion to be more explicit. My political principles, then, are strictly those of the Revolution of 1688, which first established the liberties, civil and religious, of this happy country: rights, which in their largest interpretation, I should be ever as ready to defend as you will be anxious to retain.—In a word, I appear before you as an humble but determined advocate of that sacred cause, so justly dear to us, Protestant Ascendancy.

My views regarding the true policy of the country are these;—that is the duty of its Legislature carefully to watch the public expenditure, in order to enforce economy as far as is consistent with the efficiency of our necessary establishments; —to encourage with foreign nations a liberal interchange of the products of industry where it would be mutually beneficial, to the exclusion of a competition where it would be ruinous; to proceed with all real and practical reforms which do not impair the character and destroy the integrity of the Constitution; and finally, to preserve that tranquillity and peace, domestic and foreign, at every sacrifice, save that of National honour, which is so necessary to reinforce the energies and heighten the prosperity of the country. And these principles, Gentlemen, should I attain the high honour to which I aspire, will be the constant guide of my Parliamentary conduct.

Connected in some degree, Gentlemen, with both Agriculture and Commerce, and consequently in every respect ONE OF YOURSELVES, it would be my endeavour to support both these interests, which when properly regarded are identical.

Lastly gentlemen, should I be chosen your Representative, I shall manifest my gratitude for the distinction conferred upon me by an anxious and undeviating attention in Parliament to the local interests of this highly respectable town.

These, gentlemen, are my opinions and my professions, the only pledges of my future conduct that, under present circumstances, it is in my power to offer. If I be fortunate enough to realize the object of my ambition, I hope I may hereafter appear before you with a confidence inspired by something more than mere promises or professions.

I have only to add, that, if in this address, I have inadvertently omitted alluding to any of these important topics, which now so deeply engage public attention, I shall be most happy still further to explain myself either personally or on the hustings.

Again soliciting, most respectfully, the honour of your votes and interest on this occasion.

I remain, Gentlemen,

Your faithful and obedient servant,

MICHAEL THOMAS SADLER.

* Mr. Hinde, in stating his opinion, at the hustings, on the Irish Municipal Reform Bill, said:—"That he never would have supported the measure introduced by Lord Melbourne's government, as he did not consider the state of Ireland similar to that of England, and consequently that a measure similar to those passed for England and Scotland, would not work with efficiency or safety in Ireland, with regard to the Irish Church. When last in Parliament he entertained similar opinions to those then advocated by the principal members of the present Ministry, [Whigs,] and if he now differed from them on that question, it was not from a change of his sentiments, but because they have deserted their principles. What was their reply to Mr. Ward, M.P. for St. Albans, who then introduced a measure or resolution similar to that now adopted by Lord John Russell,—'We oppose the resolutions because we are not prepared to legislate upon a theoretical contingency, inasmuch as no surplus has been proved to exist'."

* The Right Hon. Chas. Grey, Viscount Howick, (the present Earl Grey,) was for the first time returned to Parliament without opposition. In 1807 he declined a contest, after issuing the following address:—

TO THE GENTLEMEN, CLERGY, AND FREEHOLDERS OF THE COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

GENTLEMEN,—Near the conclusion of the first session of a Parliament, in which there are depending a number of private bills altogether unexampled, the greatest part advanced to their last stages, and the chief expense of the whole already incurred, whilst much public business still remains to be concluded, and amongst the rest, the bills necessary to give full effect to a plan of finance, having for its object the relief of the people from increasing taxation; the bills for the better maintainance and education of the poor; the bill to prevent the future grant of reversions; the bill for reforming the acknowledged imperfections of the Scotch judicature, and extending to our fellow-subjects in the northern parts of the Island the benefit of Trial by Jury: whilst the finance committee was actively employed in tracing out abuses, and was so far advanced in one of the objects of its enquiry as to be ready at the bar to report to the House a case of great apparent delinquency: before the trials depending in the Election committee were yet concluded, or it was known of what members the House of Commons was legally composed: before an act of approbation, without which no money voted for the public service can be legally applied, had been passed. In such a state of things, and in the midst of so much important business, both public and private, the Ministers have advised an abrupt dissolution of the Parliament, venturing to assert that the affairs of the country may be suspended without material inconvenience, and with the obvious, I should almost say, the avowed purpose of taking advantage of a cry, excited and encouraged by the basest arts of calumny and misrepresentation.

This event, Gentlemen, calls upon you once more to exercise your important privilege of choosing your representatives. The dangers of the present moment, increased as they are by the spirit thus manifested by the Ministers of the Crown, imperiously require that the choice should be made with the greatest care and deliberation, that you should seek for men who will steadily maintain the principles of the constitution amidst the storms which may be approaching, and whose firmness and independence of character you have had sufficient proofs to justify your confidence. Of my own qualifications for such a trust at so difficult a crisis it is not for me to speak. What they may be, you must, after more than twenty years' experience of them, have better grounds for judging than any professions which I might make: I can only offer myself to you upon the same principles on which I have heretofore solicited your support, and which I have been equally desirous of maintaining whether in or out of office. These principles must make me the declared enemy of the present administration, who have come into power on an implied pledge, utterly incompatible with a free discharge of their duty: whose first acts prove that they have carried into government the same factious spirit which so strongly marked their proceedings in opposition: who, with an hypocritical recommendation for union on their lips, are endeavouring by the foulest means, to excite political dissensions and religious animosities in all parts of the Kingdom: and who, when their own personal interest is in view, have shown themselves equally regardless of the repose of their Sovereign, and of the welfare and tranquillity of their country.

 TO THE REVEREND THE VICE CHANCELLOR OF OXFORD.

Whitehall, Feb. 4, 1829.

MY DEAR SIR,—I take the very first opportunity of which I am at liberty to avail myself to make a communication to you which is most distressing to my feelings.

I have considered it to be my duty, as one of the responsible advisers of the King, humbly to signify to his Majesty the opinion which I have formed, in entire concurrence with all my colleagues in the Government, that the period is arrived when his Majesty's servants must take in their collective capacity some decisive line with regard to the state of Ireland, and to the various subjects affecting the tranquillity of that country which are involved in what is called the Catholic Question.

Sir James Cotter . w. 80

After maturely weighing the present position of affairs, and the prospects of the future,—adverting to the opinions repeatedly expressed by majorities in the House of Commons,—to the difficulties which must arise, in the present state of Ireland, from continued division in the Council of his Majesty, and disunion between the two Houses of Parliament,—it has appeared to his Majesty's Government that there is less of evil and less of danger, under the existing circumstances of the country, in the attempt to make some satisfactory adjustment of the Catholic Question, than in any other course which we can suggest. In the offer of my advice to his Majesty, as one of his confidential and responsible servants, I have been compelled to exclude every consideration but that of the interests and necessities of the country.

No sooner, however, had I fulfilled the obligations of my duty to his Majesty than I began maturely to reflect on the relation in which I stand to the University of Oxford.

I cannot doubt that the resistance which I have hitherto offered to the claims of the Roman Catholics has been one of the main grounds upon which I have been entitled to the confidence and support of a very large body of my constituents; and, although I discontinue that resistance solely from the firm belief that perseverance in it would be not only unavailing, but would be injurious to those interests which it is my especial duty to uphold, yet I consider myself bound to surrender to the University, without delay, the trust which they have confided to me.

I take the liberty of requesting that you will communicate this letter to those leading Members of the University with whom you may think proper to confer, and that you will consult with them as to the period at which it will be most convenient to the University that my seat in Parliament should be vacated.

I will be guided by the suggestions with which you may favour me in this respect in making my application to the Crown for some nominal appointment which may vacate my seat.

By this painful sacrifice—by the forfeiture of that high distinction, which I have prized much more than any other object of ambition—I shall, at least, give a decisive proof that I have not taken my present course without the most mature deliberation, and that I have not suffered myself to be influenced by any other motive than that of an overpowering sense of public duty.

My present relation to the University will be terminated—but, believe me that, to the latest hour of my existence, I shall never be unmindful of the confidence with which I have been honoured, and of the kindness and indulgence which I have invariably experienced—and that I shall study to maintain, with unabated zeal, the privileges and interests of the university and of the Church of England, notwithstanding the dissolution of those ties which have more immediately bound me to their service.

I have the honour to be, my dear Sir,

With every sentiment of respect and regard,

Your most faithful servant,

ROBERT PEEL.

* SHREWSBURY DECLARATION.

"We, the undersigned Inhabitants of Shrewsbury, hereby declare that we are restrained by dutiful respect to the Crown from entering upon the public discussion of transactions in which the Sovereign has been personally engaged. We should have been wholly silent respecting the late Ministerial overtures, which have ended in the temporary disappointment of her Majesty's faithful subjects, were it not for the eager effort of a few partisans in this Borough to revive their decaying influence by a dexterous but dishonest use of the present conjuncture. We cannot allow them, unproved, to assume for the first time the virtue of loyalty, nor, uncontradicted, to carry to the foot of the throne their own dangerous opinions, as possessing the general sympathy of their townsmen. We therefore owe it to ourselves, and to the town of Shrewsbury, to declare that we regard with strong indignation, but still with stronger contempt, the false and calumnious assertions by which it is sought, for factious ends, to fix the charge of disloyal insolence on those statesmen who are, under a gracious Providence, the main-stay of the Monarchy, and, as we humbly trust, will yet become its preservers. We assert, on the contrary, that the conduct of the Duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel in the late negotiations was eminently distinguished by constitutional principle, disinterested honesty, and genuine loyalty; and we shall be prepared to unite with those illustrious men in defending the just honour and dignity of the Crown and the integrity of our Constitution in Church and State."

May 20, 1839.

SIR ROBERT PEEL'S ANSWER.

Whitehall, June 4th, 1839.

GENTLEMEN,

You could not have transmitted the declaration which I have this day received from Sir Richard Jenkins through any channel more acceptable to me than the hands of a gentleman, your representative in Parliament, who has recommended himself to his Sovereign by his conduct in public trusts of great importance, and has received the highest distinction specially appropriated to the reward of civil service.

I have a strong conviction that, in expressing your opinion that my conduct in the recent transactions to which your declaration refers has been in conformity with constitutional principles, you are anticipating the judgment which, after a very short period, will be pronounced by a very large majority of that portion of the community whose deliberate sentiments ultimately prevail over misrepresentation and calumny, and constitute public opinion in this country.

SHROPSHIRE.			NORTH DIVISION.

Be this, however, as it may, you may depend upon it that I shall steadily adhere to the principles of which you have approved, and that I shall never accept office upon any conditions or understanding which may appear to me incompatible with the constitutional authority of a Minister of the Crown, or which would restrain me from advising such an exercise of that authority as I might deem necessary for the efficient performance of the great public trust for which a Minister is responsible.

I am firmly persuaded that the Constitution of this country does not recognise any distinctions in respect to public appointments provided for by act of Parliament, and instituted for purposes of state, on account of the sex of the parties holding them, and that no Minister would be justified in divesting himself of all control or responsibility in respect to a particular class of such appointments.

If I deemed certain changes in that class necessary for public purposes, it was as clearly my duty to advise them as it was the duty of Lord Grey and Lord Grenville, in 1812, to require "that the connexion of the great officers of the Court with the political Administration should be clearly established in its first arrangements."

They claimed for themselves the credit, which I claim, of having acted on public grounds; and they assigned as the justification of their conduct the very same ground which is the justification of mine—namely, their firm conviction "that it was necessary to give to a new Government that character of efficiency and stability, and those marks of the constitutional support of the Crown, which were required to enable it to act usefully for the public service."

If the Constitution does recognise a distinction between public appointments on account of the sex of the parties holding them, the example of Lord Grey and Lord Grenville in 1812 is certainly no authority. If the Constitution does not recognise such distinction, there is no difference between the principle for which I contended and that upon which Lord Grey and Lord Grenville acted.

At the same time no one can feel more deeply, nor admit more fully, than I do, that the constitutional right to advise changes in the household is a perfectly different question from the exercise of that right, and that the exercise of it, particularly in respect to those appointments in the household which formed the chief subject of recent discussion, should be restrained by every possible deference to the wishes, and every possible consideration for the feelings, of the Sovereign.

But I must contend, that, if I deemed it necessary to advise any changes in those appointments, I am much less responsible for the necessity than those Ministers who had not merely given to this department of the household a political character, but who had established its immediate connexion with the Administration, by permitting their nearest female relatives to occupy the chief appointments.

* R. B. Sheridan represented this place during several Parliaments, being brought in chiefly by the influence of the Shoemakers, who reside in great multitudes here. At the General Election in 1806, Mr. Chiford introduced Mr. M. Phillips,—the journeymen Shoemakers, as a token of respect, insisted that they should present him with a new hat, which was accordingly done, on the hustings, by a contribution of one penny each.

* EXTRACTS FROM SIR R. PEEL'S SPEECH,

DELIVERED FROM THE HUSTINGS IN CONNECTION WITH THIS CONTEST, TAMWORTH, JULY 24TH, 1837.

After Sir R. Peel had spoken for some time on local matters, he said, I will now proceed to state to you what I consider is implied in Conservative principles; I have mentioned the maintenance of the Established Church, and I contend for it not merely for the benefit of those who are members of it, but as a great bulwark against infidelity and irreligion, as affording to every poor man in every parish the means of spiritual instruction, and as enabling him in his dying moments to have the consolations of religion. (Cheers.) I oppose that to the voluntary principle, from a firm conviction that no arrangement of that principle would effectually and permanently provide for the maintenance of divine worship. (Cheers.) By Conservative principles I also understand the support of each branch of the constitution. I mean to support the monarchy. (Captain Townshend, "So do we.") There is a French saying that "He who is very ready to excuse himself must find an accusation within." (Laughter and Cheers.) I have merely declared my attachment to the monarchy; I have not imputed any want of attachment to it to the honourable candidate, but as if upbraided by some secret monitor he seems to cry out "Don't impute that to me." (Laughter and Cheers.) I also mean to maintain the privileges of the House of Commons and the House of Lords, and to resist every specious pretext of professing Liberals, who want to alter the ancient constitution, and by gradual changes to substitute for it a democratic republic. (Cheers.) I also consider that Conservative principles are consistent with the maintenance of the Reform Bill, not only in letter but in spirit. I have been willing to receive that measure as the final settlement of the representation system of this country, and its supporters positively declared it to be its final adjustment. To prove this, I will quote the opinion of Lord Althorp, the proposer of the Reform Bill, which was passed in 1832. In 1833 the question of the Ballot was brought forward, and Lord Althorp who had always been friendly to the ballot before that time, opposed it, and in doing so made use of these words: "I appeal to every gentleman who was in the last Parliament and who knew all the proceedings while the question of reform was pending, whether the promoters of that measure did not contend that as far as the representation of the people was concerned it should be considered and adopted as a final measure." I considered and adopted it as a final measure, not final and exclusive against all improvements of the institutions of the country, but so far as the representative system is concerned. Conservative principles do not imply any hostility to cautious and temperate reform; but those who profess them ought to have the acuteness to distinguish between considerate and progressive reform, called for by some practical necessity and administered in a friendly spirit, and those absurd projects which night after night loaded the table of the House of Commons. What do you think of having 90 measures to discuss in one night? What do you think of 170 propositions for altering the constitution? (Laughter and Hear.) Why the people would not know themselves, nor old England, if these men were to have their way. It was most fortunate there were so many of them: they were like men fighting in a crowd, so many had their sticks elevated that fortunately all of them could not strike home. It was the number of these absurd measures, some prompted by a ridiculous vanity, and others by a mischievous desire to subvert the institutions of the country on the part of their authors, which prevented much of the intended harm; they were all in such a hurry and struck so quickly, that the unfortunate victim, the constitution of the country, at the end of the sessions was alive and able to get on his legs again. (Great Laughter and Cheering.)

If ever there was a time when the constituent body of this great country had important duties to perform, it is at the present period. This is a vital crisis: at all times a general Election must be a most important event, as determining the character of the following parliament, but the future parliament is called under peculiar circumstances. We have on the throne a young sovereign of an age the lowest in the scale of years which permit her to assume the functions of royalty. We are all agreed in professing devoted loyalty to the Queen. (Cheers from all sides.) I do not believe a young sovereign ever ascended the throne who had received a more prudent and virtuous education, possessed of greater natural acuteness, influenced by better dispositions, or actuated by a stronger desire for the welfare and happiness of her subjects. (Cheers.) She asks the constituency to give their assistance to those who will support the monarchy and the church, and enable her to maintain the fundamental principles of the constitution: listen to the words of her Majesty, as delivered by her own lips. She declared that it was her wish to maintain the established religion of this country: she therefore excludes the voluntary principle. She states that she been educated in the principles of the national faith, which she will maintain in all its integrity, at the same time that she will consent to such improvements as are required in the civil and ecclesiastical institutions of the empire. I ask you who are the most likely to support the institutions of the country—a powerful conservative minority, (or majority, if the constituents do their duty) or men who either themselves advocate, or allow an unjust predominance to those who advocate the voluntary system, and who avow their wish to destroy the House of Lords? (Cheers.) Her Majesty therefore makes a direct appeal to the constituency to return good Conservative members. Her Majesty has stated her intention to be to maintain the established Church, and the ancient British constitution; and the Conservatives have invariably acted in confirmation with that intention. (Cheers.) It was they who maintained the ancient institutions of the country against assaults by the supporters of the ministry. Return me to Parliament and I will maintain to the utmost of my power, the principles which I have avowed, I will resist every insidious scheme for changing the character of the institutions of the country; and I will never consent to the gradual infusion of so much of the democratic principle into the government, as will ultimately convert the ancient monarchy into a republic. (Cheers.) I will maintain the privileges of the House of Lords, and I will strive to the utmost of my power to enable her Majesty, after a long and glorious reign, to transmit to her successor, and God grant it may be the direct heir in her own family, the prerogative of the monarchy unimpaired, and the liberties of the people increased and confirmed. * This City has been the scene of many great political struggles, particularly at several of the Elections of the Right Hon. Chas. James Fox, Lord John Townshend, and the celebrated philologist, John Horne Tooke, Esq. On the death of Mr. Fox, Mr. Dennis O'Brien offered his services, and Mr. Sheridan also presented himself, but, on hearing that all the late Members of the Whig Club had declared in favour of Lord Percy, the eldest son of the Duke of Northumberland, he withdrew. That young Nobleman was accordingly elected, without opposition: yet at the General Election in 1806, which followed soon after, the sole Candidates were the Right Hon. R. B. Sheridan, Treasurer of the Navy, Commodore Sir Samuel Hood, and James Paull, Esq. This long, close, and expensive contest, was memorable in many respects; but that which followed it, in 1807, during the absence of one of the popular Candidates, has generally been considered as the most singular, in every point of view. The one in May, 1837, when Sir Francis Burdett resigned, at the request of some of the Electors, and on his re-election was opposed by John Temple Leader, Esq, the present member, created a strong party-feeling throughout the United Kingdom, when Sir F. was returned, by a large majority.

+ WESTMINSTER ELECTION, 1784.

The Duchess of Devonshire, the gay and graceful leader of fashion and the queen of the Foxites, came first into celebrity in the memorable Westminster Election of 1784. A strong effort had been made to turn out Fox. The election, had, according to the habit of those times, continued nearly a month, and though the ministerial candidate, Sir Cecil Wray, had only a small majority, Fox was at his last gasp. The party were instantly driven to new resources, and the Duchess of Devonshire restored the fates of the whig champion. The progress of the canvass thenceforward is amusing. The entire of the votes for Westminster having been exhausted, the only hope was in exciting the suburbs. The Duchess instantly ordered out her equipage, and with her sister, the Countess of Duncannon, drove, polling list in hand, to the houses of the voters. Entreaties, ridicule, civilities, influence of all kinds, were lavished on these rough legislators; and the novelty of being solicited by two women of rank and of remarkable fashion, took the popular taste universally. The immediate result was, that they gallantly came to the poll, and Fox who had been a hundred behind Sir Cecil, speedily left him an hundred behind in turn. An imperfect attempt was made on the hostile side to oppose this new species of warfare by similar captivation, and Lady Salisbury was moved to awake the dying fortunes of the government candidate. But the effort failed; it was imitation, it was too late; and the Duchess was six-and-twenty, and Lady Salisbury thirty-four! These are reasons enough, and more than enough, for the rejection of any man from the hustings. On the 16th May, Fox was 235 a-head, and the election was over; but the high bailiff, Corbett, refused to return him, on the plea that a scrutiny had been demanded. Still the whigs were not to be disappointed of their ovation.

The exultation of those gay times forms a strange contrast to the grim monotony of our own. Fox, after being chaired in great pomp through the streets, was finally carried into the court-yard of Carlton House. The Prince's plume was on his banners, in acknowledgement of princely partisanship. A banner inscribed "Sacred to female patriotism," recorded the services of the Duchess. The carriages of the Dukes of Devonshire and Portland, each drawn by six horses, moved in the procession, and Fox's own carriage was a pile of rejoicing whiggism. On its boxes and traces, and where they could, sat Colonel North, afterwards Lord Guildford, Adam, who but a few years before wounded the patriot in a duel, and a whole cluster of political friends, followers, and expectants. The Prince came to the balustrade before the house to cheer him, with a crowd of fashionable people. Fox finished the triumph by an harangue to the mob, and they in return finished by a riot, an illumination, and breaking Lord Temple's windows.

But the festivities were scarcely begun. The Prince threw open his showy apartments to the nobility, and gave them a brilliant fete in the gardens, which happened to be at its height just when the King was passing through St. James Park in state to open the new Parliament. The rival interests were within a brick wall of each other, and their spirit could not have been more strangely contrasted than in their occupations. But nights and days to those graceful pursuers of pleasure and politics alike knew no intermission. On that very evening, the celebrated beautiful and witty Mrs. Crewe gave a brilliant rout, in which "blue and buff" was the universal costume of both sexes. The Prince himself appeared in the party colours. At supper he toasted the fair giver of the feast in the words "True blue and Mrs. Crewe." The lady, not unskillfully, and with measureless applause, returned it by another,—"True blue and all of you." The "buff and blue" were the uniform of Washington and his troops and imprudently adopted by Fox to declare his hostility to the Government. Wrexall's Post. Mem.—Blackwood's Mag.

* SPEECH OF SIR. F. BURDETT, AFTER THE DECLARATION OF THE POLL BY THE HIGH BAILIFF.—1837.

GENTLEMEN,—Electors of the city and liberties of Westminster, it now becomes my pleasing task to return you my most sincere and grateful thanks for the high honour which you have again conferred upon me. In the first place, I have to thank you for the arrangements that you have made, and for the consideration you have manifested in regard to the present state of my health, and for the relief your attention has afforded me from those duties which would have been painful and difficult on this great and important occasion, and which has rendered my part in the struggle comparatively easy and full of satisfaction. (Cheers.) Permit me to congratulate you upon the noble, the patriotic, the independent efforts you have made, and through you, gentlemen, to congratulate the people at large upon the glorious triumph of the English Constitution, which has been achieved against the vain and futile efforts of Radicalism and democracy. Gentlemen, I congratulate you upon the firm determination you have shown to maintain all the great and inestimable institutions of this country against the efforts of her enemies. (Loud cheers, with faint hisses.) The task which I have now to perform is both short and pleasant, and I shall not now detain you, after the triumph you have achieved and the victory you have won, merely to indulge my own feelings of exultation and of gratification; but this I will say, that the electors of Westminster have by the result of their noble and patriotic exertions set an example to the people of England, to be looked up to and followed; and in every part of this great nation I make no doubt but that this brilliant example will have the happy effect of sending good men, who love their country and venerate her constitution, to unite for their defence, and at the same time to defeat the machinations and conspiracies of the bad. (Loud applause.) I will not dwell on these subjects, but this much I will observe, that you are much indebted even to your enemies for the signal triumph you have so nobly and so gloriously achieved. (Great cheering.) The malignity and malice of some persons has done much to aid the cause of the Constitution, but I should say that if there is one individual to whom you are more indebted than any other, that person certainly was Mr. Daniel O'Connell. (Loud cheers and groans) The attacks of that individual have tended to serve the cause which they were designed to injure. Gentlemen, the big beggarman of Ireland (renewed cheers) has mistaken the good sense and patriotism of the people of England. He has intruded himself with his uncalled-for advice upon the electors of Westminster, and with (as it now turns out) his disregarded threats. He has intruded that advice and those suggestions in an Irish letter couched in a strain more Irish than Irish itself, (loud laughter) and containing in every point that mixture of blarney and bully, the former of which has only excited the disgust, and the latter the contempt, of the electors of Westminster. (Loud cheers, groans, and laughter.) I know not what influence that letter may be said to have had upon His Majesty's Ministers, but this I know, that the people of England, and especially the electors of Westminster, were made of sterner stuff. Whatever His Majesty's Ministers may think proper to do, what course they may choose to pursue, we have shown our determination to maintain and support the English Constitution, and to resist to the uttermost the dismemberment of the British empire, notwithstanding that Mr. Daniel O'Connell is our declared and determined foe. (Loud cheers, with shouts of disapprobation from the "Leader" party.) In addition I will merely say, that you view as I do the attempt to control your opinions lately made by the great Popish priest-ridden paid patriot of Ireland, (great applause and sensation) and I will add this, that I wish such persons would declare and destroy themselves as he has done; no danger could then be apprehended, as I think it would be on all occasions safer to have such persons my foes than my friends. (Cheers and yellings from the Leader party.) Gentlemen, with these observations I shall take my leave—the sun shines upon our principles and our efforts at this moment; but there is a still brighter sunshine in every honest English heart at the triumph achieved by you, and the example you have set to the rest of England. (Cheers.) Wishing you all good and happiness, and full of the devotion I owe you, electors of Westminster, and to the friends to the cause of England and the Constitution, I now take my leave. (Renewed cheering, which continued for several minutes, during which time the hon. baronet bowed to the meeting, and retired from the hustings, accompanied as he came, by a large body of his friends and supporters.)

*A COPY OF THE FOLLOWING LETTER FROM MR. LONG APPEARED IN THE DEVIZES GAZETTE.

London, May 27th, 1839.

MY DEAR PHILLIPS,— As on two occasions I have not only received your support, but have been nominated by you, I feel it the more incumbent upon me to apprise you of the step I am about to take. Called upon as I was, in the first instance by numerous electors, holding opposite opinions in politics, to become a Candidate for the Northern Division; and a second time returned by as nearly as possible an equality of votes from both parties, I felt that the proper course to pursue, and one which best accorded with my own views, was to keep aloof from party as much as possible. With that view, I have generally supported the Ministry when I thought them right, and opposed them when they appeared to me to be wrong.

On the late question, affecting Lord Normanby's Government of Ireland, I felt bound to give my vote against his policy, disapproving as I did most highly of his conduct, and of the encouragement given to Mr. O'Connell and his party to pursue their mischievous schemes of agitation. On the Jamaica question, although I was anxious to enforce the act for the emancipation of the slaves, and most fully to carry out all its provisions, yet the measure proposed by the Government was of so arbitrary and tyrannical a nature, that I could not give it my support. Since these two questions, Lord Melbourne has acknowledged his inability to carry on the Government; and although the Cabinet has again been formed, consisting of the same members as before, it admits of no doubt that concessions have been made to the more Radical portion of it, which in my judgment are inconsistent with the well-being of the country. With these impressions, I feel that the time is now arrived when every man who has at heart the best interest of his country must either take his stand as a Conservative or as a Radical:—with this choice before me, I must choose the former.

This course will, I am inclined to think, not coincide with your views of politics. If I am right in this supposition, I fear I can hardly look forward to future support from you; but whether our political opinions may differ or agree, I shall always recollect with gratitude, the kind interest you have shown in my behalf, and shall beg

THE HONOURABLE HENRY LASCELLES,

By JOHN BACON SAWREY MORRITT, Esq, Seconded by WM. FENTON SCOTT, Esq.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD MILTON,

By SIR FRANCIS LINDLEY WOOD, Bart. Seconded by WILLIAM WRIGHTSON, Esq.

Upon a show of hands, the High Sheriff declared the majority to be in favour of the Honourable Henry Lascelles, and the Right Honourable Lord Milton; whereupon a Poll was demanded by Mr. Wilberforce, which commenced the same day, and continued fifteen days.

In court the High Sheriff presided in person, or by his Under Sheriff, and the disputed votes were determined by the Sheriff's Assessors, Samuel Heywood, and John Bayley, Esquires, Serjeants at Law.

The Poll was taken in the Castle Yard, at thirteen booths, amongst which the Wapentakes were apportioned according to a previous agreement between the Committees of the three Candidates. In the different booths, the Sheriff had a deputy to put the usual questions, and a Poll Clerk to record the votes; both of whom were sworn to take the poll; and in every booth each of the Candidates was allowed to have, in addition to his Cheque Clerk, an Agent to object to the doubtful votes, and a Messenger to conduct the voters objected to into Court, either to the Assessors, or to the Commissioners for administering the Oaths.

The Poll was daily open from Nine in the morning to Five in the evening, except on the first and last days. On the latter days of the poll, when the number of objections to votes increased, the Sheriff, with his Assessors, continued sitting till Eight in the evening; and those Freeholders whose right to vote was established, were allowed to poll in court. In this case, their votes were added to the numbers of the next day's poll.

On the Fifteenth day, about two hours after the close of the poll, the High Sheriff (Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esq.) declared William Wilberforce, Esq, and the Right Honourable Lord Milton to be duly elected; after which the indentures of return were duly executed.

* TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF PERTH.

GENTLEMEN,—Until within a short period, I have been able to continue in the discharge of the duties which I undertook at the general election with satisfaction to my own conscience.

Recently, however, to my deep regret, a plan of education has been propounded by the Government, and sanctioned by the House of Commons, which is founded, in my opinion, upon principles both inconsistent with the steadfast attachment to the system of Church establishments which I have always professed, and dangerous to the religion of the country. This measure I have thought it my duty to oppose.

It is true that I have not received any remonstrance on your part, nor am I myself of opinion, that in opposing such a plan of education, I violated any pledge or understanding which had passed between my constituents and myself; but considering that questions merely political are altogether secondary to those affecting religion, I cannot conscientiously continue, by general Parliamentary support, to strengthen the hands of a Government which avows its anxiety to carry out to a still greater extent, principles detrimental, as I humbly consider, to the most sacred interests of the nation.

Under these circumstances, I feel myself incapacitated for the future from fulfilling the expectations under which many of you honoured me with your support; and accordingly, with no further delay than has been required for the due consideration of so important a question, I have resolved for the present, to retire from Parlia-

A TABLE OF THE NUMBER AND DURATION OF PARLIAMENTS

HELD IN EACH REIGN,

From EDWARD I. in the Year of our Lord 1299, to the present Period, Including Twenty-six Reigns in 538 Years.

Mary ..	1553	.. 5	.. 5	Victoria I. ..	1837	Vivat Regina.

From an attentive consideration of the above statement, taken from the Rolls and Journals of both Houses of Parliament, the following facts may be deduced. In the first place it appears, that since the year 1509 (when it is generally supposed that the duration of parliaments was extended beyond one year,) only four parliaments have existed beyond 7 years, and that only ten more have had a sexennial duration. In the second place, it is sufficiently evident that of the rest, only seven parliaments have lasted above 5 years, only four parliaments above 4, and but three above 3 years. Thirdly, of the remaining number, only ten existed 2 years, and no less than thirty-seven for a shorter period. Lastly, it is certain that one parliament with another, the average duration of each since the reign of Henry VIII., does not exceed the space of 2 years and about 9 months, even including the long parliament in the reign of King Charles I., and the still longer one which his son retained for the enormous period of about 17 years.

THE MOST DISTINGUISHED STATESMEN
ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

THE PRINCE OF WALES, (GEORGE IV.),
On Seditious Writings.—1792.

On this occasion the heir apparent for the first time delivered his sentiments in parliament. His highness considering the critical state of affairs as requiring from every friend to his country a manifestation of the principles which he was resolved to support, and the more strongly in proportion to his rank and consequence in the country, spoke to the following effect :

“ When a subject of such magnitude is before the house, I should be deficient in my duty as a member of parliament, unmindful of that respect which I owe to the constitution, and inattentive to the welfare, the peace, and the happiness of the people, if I did not state to the world my opinion on the present subject of deliberation. I was educated in the principles of the British constitution, and I shall ever preserve its maxims. I shall ever cherish a reverence for the constitutional liberties of the people, as on those constitutional principles carried uniformly into practice, the happiness of these realms depends ; I am determined, as far as my interest can have any force, to give them my firm and constant support. The question at issue is in fact whether the constitution is or is not to be maintained—whether the wild ideas of untried theory are to conquer the wholesome maxims of established practice—whether those laws under which we have flourished for such a series of years are to be subverted by a reform unsanctioned by the people. As a person nearly and dearly interested in the welfare, and I shall emphatically add, the happiness of the people, it would be treason to the principles of my own mind if I did not come forward and declare my disapprobation of the seditious writings which have occasioned the motion before your lordships. My interest is connected with the interest of the people, they are so inseparable, that unless both parties concurred, the happiness of neither could exist. On this great and solid basis I ground my vote for joining in the address which approves of the proclamation. I exist by the love, the friendship, and the benevolence of the people, and their cause will I never forsake as long as I live.”

THE EARL OF CHATHAM'S LAST SPEECH IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS, 1778,

In Reply to an Address to the Crown on the Necessity of Acknowledging the Independence of America.

MY LORDS,—I lament that my infirmities have so long prevented my attendance here, at so awful a crisis. I have made an effort almost beyond my strength to come down to the house on this day, (and perhaps it will be the last time I shall ever be able to enter its walls,) to express my indignation at an idea which has gone forth of yielding up America. My Lords, I rejoice that the grave has not yet closed upon me, that I am still alive to lift up my voice against the dismemberment of this ancient and most noble monarchy. Pressed down as I am by the hand of infirmity, I am little able to assist my country in this most perilous conjuncture, but, my Lords, while I have sense and memory, I will never consent to deprive the royal offspring of the house of Brunswick of their fairest inheritance. Where is the man who will dare to advise such a measure? My Lords, his Majesty succeeded to an empire great in extent as it was unsullied in reputation: Shall we tarnish the lustre of this nation by an ignominious surrender of its rights and best possessions? Shall this great kingdom, which has survived whole and entire the Danish depredations, the Scottish inroads, and the Norman conquest, that has withstood the threatened invasion of the Spanish armada, now fall prostrate before the house of Bourbon? Surely, my Lords, this nation is no longer what it was. Shall a people, that seventeen years ago, was the terror of the world, now stoop so low as to tell its ancient, inveterate enemy to take all we have, only give us peace? It is impossible; I wage war with no man, or set of men, I wish for none of their employments, nor would I co-operate with those who still persist in unretracted error; or who, instead of acting on a firm, decisive line of conduct, halt between two opinions where there is no middle path. In God's name, if it be absolutely necessary to declare either for peace or war, and the former cannot be preserved with honour, why is not the latter commenced without hesitation. I am not, I confess, well informed of the resources of this kingdom, but I trust it has still sufficient to maintain its just rights, though I know them not. But, my Lords, any state is better than despair; let us at least make one effort, and if we must fall, let us fall like men.

THE RIGHT HON. EDMUND BURKE,

On the Relation which ought to exist between a Representative and his Constituents. Speech at Bristol.

My worthy colleague tells you, that “the topic of instructions has occasioned much altercation and uneasiness in this city;” and he expresses himself (if I understand him rightly) in favour of the coercive authority of such instructions.

Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitting attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. But his unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

My worthy colleague says, his will ought to be subservient to yours. If that be all, the thing is innocent. If government were a matter of will upon any side, yours without question ought to be superior. But government and legislation are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination; and what sort of reason is that in which the determination precedes the discussion; in which one set of men deliberate, and another decide; and where those who form the conclusion, are perhaps three hundred miles distant from those who hear the arguments.

To deliver an opinion, is the right of all men ; that of constituents is a weighty and respectable opinion, which a representative ought always to rejoice to hear, and which he ought always most seriously to consider. But authoritative instructions, mandates issued, which the member is bound blindly and implicitly to obey, to vote, and to argue for, though contrary to the clearest conviction of his judgment and conscience,—these are things utterly unknown to the laws of the land, and which arise from a fundamental mistake of the whole order and tenour of our constitution.

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests, which interests each must maintain as an agent and advocate, against other agents and advocates ; but Parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole ; where not local purposes, not local prejudices, ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member, indeed ; but when you have chosen him, he is not a member of Bristol, but he is a member of Parliament. If the local constituent should have an interest, or should form an hasty opinion, evidently opposite to the real good of the rest of the community, the member for that place ought to be as far as any other from any endeavour to give it effect.

THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM PITT,

On Mr. Grey's Motion for Reform, 1797.

The utmost point of difference, indeed, that ever subsisted between those who supported, and those who opposed the question of reform, previous to the French revolution, which forms a new era in politics, and in the history of the world, was union and concert in comparison with the views of those who maintained that question upon grounds of expediency, and those who assert it as a matter of right. The question with those who contended for reform on grounds of expediency, then was, whether the means proposed were calculated to infuse new vigour into the constitution. The object with those who affect a parliamentary reform upon French principles, is the shortest way to compass its utter destruction. From the period when the new and alarming era of the French revolution broke in upon the world, and the doctrines which it ushered into light laid hold of the minds of men, I found that the grounds upon which the question rested were essentially and fundamentally altered. Whatever may have been my former opinion, am I to be told that I am inconsistent, if I feel that it is expedient to forego the advantage which any alteration may be calculated to produce, rather than afford an inlet to principles with which no compromise can be made : rather than hazard the utter annihilation of a system under which this country has flourished in its prosperity, by which it has been supported in its adversity, and by the energy and vigour of which it has been enabled to recover from the difficulties with which it has had to contend ? In the warmth of argument upon this subject, the learned gentleman (Mr. Erskine, the seconder of the motion,) has conceived himself at liberty to assume a proposition, not only unsupported by reasoning, but even contradicted by his own statements. The learned gentleman assumed, that it was necessary to adopt the moderate reform proposed, in order to separate those whom such a plan would satisfy, from those who would be satisfied with none ;—but who I contend, by means of this, would only labour to attain the complete object of their wishes, in the annihilation of the constitution. Those who treat parliament as an usurpation, and monarchy as an invasion of the rights of man, would not receive a reform which was not the recognition of their right, and which they would consider as vitiated if conveyed in any other shape. Though such men had availed themselves of the aid of those who supported parliamentary reform on other grounds, would they be contented with this species of reform as an ultimate object ?

The hon. mover has talked highly of the blessings which are to result to mankind from the establishment of French liberty ; and because new lights have appeared to set off the doctrine of freedom, this house is therefore to alter their principles of government, and to accomodate themselves to the new order of things. From such lights, however, I hope we shall ever protect this constitution, as against principles inconsistent with any government. If we are to be relieved from any evils under which we may at present labour, by means of this new light, I, for one, beg leave to enter my solemn protest against the idea. The doctrines upon which it is founded, are false, shallow, and presumptuous, more absurd than the most pestilent theories that ever were engendered by the disordered imagination of man ; more hostile to the real interests of mankind, to national prosperity, to individual happiness, to intellectual and moral improvement, than any tyranny by which the human species was ever afflicted. And, for this new luminary, shall we abandon the polar star of the British constitution, by which we have been led to happiness and glory, by which the country has supported every danger which it has been called upon to encounter, and risen superior to every difficulty by which it has been assailed ?

The experiment proposed is new, extensive, overturning all the ancient system, and substituting something in its stead, without any theoretical advantage, or any practical recommendation. In former plans the variety of the modes of representation was admitted to be proof, how much better time and circumstances may mould and regulate representation than any institutions founded on reasonings a priori, and how necessary it was to give way to the effects of such experience. It is not the harsh uniformity of principles, each pushed to its extreme, but the general complexion arising out of the various shades, which forms the harmony of the representation, and the practical excellence of the constitution, capable of improving itself consistently with its fundamental principles.

THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES JAMES FOX,

On the Same.

Be it remembered, that the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Pitt) has again and again introduced and patronized the same subject, and that on all occasions on which he has brought it forward, it has invariably received my approbation and support. I have invariably declared myself a friend to parliamentary reform by whomsoever proposed; and though in all the discussions that have taken place, I have had occasion to express my doubts as to the efficacy of the particular mode, I have never hesitated to say that the principle itself was beneficial; and that though not called for with the urgency which some persons, and among others, the right hon. gentleman, declared to exist, I was constantly of opinion that it ought not to be discouraged. Now, however, that all doubt upon the subject is removed by the pressure of our calamities, and the dreadful alternative seems to be, whether we shall sink into the most abject thralldom, or continue in the same course until we are driven into the horrors of anarchy, I can have no hesitation in saying, that the plan of recurring to the principle of melioration which the constitution points out is become a desideratum to the people of Great Britain.

This is my opinion, and it is not an opinion merely founded upon theory, but upon actual observation of what is passing in the world. I conceive, that if we are not resolved to shut our eyes to the instructive lessons of the times, we must be convinced of the propriety of seasonable concession; and, as there are discontents in this country, which we can neither dissemble nor conceal, let us not, by an unwise and criminal disdain, irritate and fret them into violence and disorder. These discontents may happily subside; but a man must be sanguine indeed in his temper, or dull in his intellect, if he would leave to the operation of chance what he might more certainly obtain by the exercise of reason. When government is daily presenting itself in the shape of weakness that borders on dissolution—unequal to all the functions of useful strength, and formidable only in pernicious corruption—weak in power, and strong only in influence—am I to told that such a state of things can go on with safety to any branch of the constitution? If men think that, under the impression of such a system, we can go on without a recurrence to first principles, they argue in direct opposition to all theory and all practice. Sir, it is not the part of statesmen, it is not the part of rational beings, to amuse ourselves with such fallacious dreams: we must not sit down and lament over our hapless situation; we must not deliver ourselves up to an imbecile despondency that would animate the approach of danger; but by a seasonable and vigorous measure of wisdom, meet it with a sufficient and seasonable remedy. We may be disappointed—we may fail in the application, for no man can be certain of his footing on ground that is unexplored; but we shall at least have the chance of success—we shall at least do what belongs to legislators, and to rational beings on the occasion, and I have confidence that our efforts will not be in vain. I say that we should give ourselves a chance and I may add, the best chance, for deliverance ; since it would exhibit to the country a proof that we had conquered the first great difficulty that stood in the way of bettering our condition—that we had conquered ourselves.

We have heard to day, Sir, all the old arguments about honour on the one side being as likely as honour on the other ; that there are good men on both sides of the house, that a man may be a member for a close borough upon the one side of the house, as well as upon the other, and that he may be a good man, sit where he may. No man disputes the existence of private and individual integrity ; but, Sir, this is not representation. If a man comes here as the proprietor of a burgage tenure, he does not come here as the representative of the people. The whole of this system, as it is now carried on, is as outrageous to morality, as it is pernicious to just government ; it gives a scandal to our character, which not merely degrades the house of Commons in the eyes of the people ; it does more, it undermines the very principles of integrity in their hearts, and gives a fashion to dishonesty and imposture. They hear of a person giving or receiving four or five thousand pounds as the purchase money of a seat for a close borough ; and they hear the very man, who received and put into his pocket the money, make a vehement speech in this house against bribery ; and they see him move for the commitment to prison of a poor unfortunate wretch at your bar, who has been convicted in taking a single guinea for his vote in the very borough, perhaps, where he had publicly and unblushingly sold his influence, though that miserable guinea was necessary to save a family from starving, under the horrors of a war which he had contributed to bring upon the country. Sir, these are the things that paralyze you to the heart, that vitiate the whole system, and sap the foundations of patriotism and spirit.

If it is clearly demonstrated, that genuine representation alone can give solid power, and that in order to make government strong, the people must make the government; you ought to act on this grand maxim of political wisdom thus demonstrated, and call in the people, according to the original principles of your system, to the strength of your government. In doing this you will not innovate. In making the people of England a constituent part of the government of England, you do no more than restore the genuine edifice designed and framed by our ancestors.

Now, Sir, I think, that acting on this footing, to extend the right of election to housekeepers is the best and most advisable plan of reform. I think also, that it is the most perfect recurrence to the first known and recorded principles of our constitution. My opinion is, that the best plan of representation is that which shall bring into activity the greatest number of independent voters, and that is defective which would bring forth those whose situation and condition take from them the power of deliberation.

The remedy proposed is simple, easy, and practicable; it does not touch the vitals of the constitution; and I sincerely believe will restore us to peace and harmony. Do you not think that you must come to parliamentary reform soon; and is it not better to come to it now while you have the power of deliberation, than when, perhaps, it may be extorted from you by convulsions? Pride, obstinacy, and insult, must end in concessions, and those concessions must be humble in proportion to our unbecoming pride.

THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES JAMES FOX,

In Opposition to the Address,—1792.

If there were complaints of grievances, I would redress them where they were really proved; but above all, I would constantly, cheerfully, patiently listen—I would make it known, that if any man felt a grievance, he might come freely to the bar of this house and bring his proofs. And it should be made manifest to the world, that where they did exist they should be redressed; where they did not, that it should be made manifest. If I were to issue a proclamation, this should be my proclamation—"If any man has a grievance, let him bring it to the bar of the Commons' house of parliament, with the firm persuasion of having it honestly investigated." These are the subsidies that I would grant to government. What instead of this is done? Suppress the complaint—check the circulation of knowledge—command that no man shall read—or, that as no man under one hundred pounds a year can kill a partridge, that no man under twenty or thirty pounds shall dare to read or think!

I love the constitution as it is established: it has grown up with me as a prejudice and as a habit, as well as from conviction. I know that it is calculated for the happiness of man, and that its constituent branches of king, lords, and commons, could not altered or impaired without entailing on this country the most dreadful miseries. It is the best adapted to England, because, as the noble earl truly said, the people of England think it the best; and the safest course is to consult the judgment and gratify the predilections of a country. Heartily convinced as I am, however, that to secure the peace, strength, and happiness of the country, we must maintain the constitution against all innovation, yet I do not think so highly and superstitiously of any human institution as to believe it is incapable of being perverted ; on the contrary, I believe that it requires an increasing vigilance on the part of the people to prevent the decay and delapidations to which every edifice is subject. I think, too, that we may be laid asleep to our real danger by those perpetual alarms to loyalty, which, in my opinion, are daily sapping the constitution, under the pretext of guarding it from the assaults of republicans and levellers, we run the hazard of leaving it open to the other and more feeble side. We are led insensibly to the opposite danger, that of increasing the power of the crown, and of degrading the influence of the house of Commons.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON,

On the Address, 1830.

The desire of this country, and of every other party concerned, is to settle, if possible, every point by means of negotiation, and by negotiation alone. With respect to the repeal of the union with Ireland, it is opposed in the strongest manner by the noble duke (Leinster),—it was objected to by all the noble duke's friends in Ireland,—it was objected to by all proprietors in Ireland,—by a very great majority of Roman catholics, and by nearly all the protestants of Ireland : and it is opposed by the unanimous voice of this house, and equally by the unanimous voice of the other, with at least only one exception. With respect to the catholic question, I really do not see the advantage of repeating against me the reproach of having given way upon that question from motives of fear. I deny that I was influenced even in the slightest degree by any such motive. I gave way, if it can be termed giving way, solely because the interests of the country required it. I urged the question solely upon views of policy, expediency, and justice ; and upon these grounds I now justify the measure, and defend my conduct. No man either in that country or in this can be more painfully aware than I am of the extreme poverty of the Irish, and of the great inconvenience and danger to the empire resulting from the deplorable state of the lower order : I repeat no person can be more sensible of all this than I am. But it is not by coming to this house and talking to your lordships of the poverty of the people that the poor can be relieved, or the evils resulting from that poverty remedied. If we wish to tranquillize Ireland, we must persuade those who have money to buy estates and settle in that country ; and to employ their capital in its improvement. If persons of estate and property in that country would reside in it, and spend their incomes there, they would do more to tranquillize it than all the measures which his majesty's ministers can adopt.

MR. BROUGHAM, (NOW LORD BROUGHAM,)

On the Same.

His majesty, it seems, is still enabled to promise peace to the country, and I regard it as the duty of the crown and its ministers to preserve for the people the blessings of peace ; and I know no way in which those blessings can be so well secured, as by laying down a clear, undeviating rule against every act of interference with the internal concerns of other countries. For my own part, I will oppose the bad measures, come from what quarter they may. I will oppose the repeal of the union to the last hour of my life, though brought forward by an honourable gentleman with whom I generally agree. The people of England are disposed for peace, and will not suffer the peace to be broken by any set of ministers, however remarkable for attachment to foreign tyrants. The people of this country are enamoured of their own liberties, and respect the liberties of others. Our liberties however are safe; not because the king says so,—not because a congress of sovereigns may meet to check the spread of infection,—not because negotiations are on foot, which threaten war to Europe. The monarchy, the parliament, and the institutions of this country are safe, because there is not in those institutions that rottenness which pervades those of other countries. There may be a few incendiaries and disaffected persons, but the strength of the law is sufficient to subdue them. The body of the people are sound. They prefer a limited monarchy; and I for one, wishing well to the people's rights, am resolved to live or perish with them, because I understand and appreciate those rights; and because I perceive that the character, the habits, and the temper of the people of England are in favour of a monarchy and an aristocracy. I am a friend to such a form of government, and do not wish to see it changed. I have no fear that it will be changed: and I would rather, if this sort of government must eventually share the fate of all mortal creations, much rather perish in the ruin than read over its remains a mournful lesson of the instability of the best of human institutions.

EARL GREY,

On accepting Office, 1830.

MY LORDS,—I take this early opportunity to give a brief explanation of the principles on which I have agreed to accept the high honour conferred upon me. With respect to parliamentary reform, I consider it essential that government should take into consideration the state of the representation in parliament, to correct what is imperfect, and to re-establish the confidence of the public, which parliament, in its present constitution, does not enjoy to a sufficient extent. I am not disposed to support any wild and fanciful plan of reform, or those extreme principles of universal suffrage, which are unsuitable to the constitution and to the country. Feeling that some reform is necessary, the principles which I wish to regulate it by, are to do as much as is necessary to secure to the people a full influence in that in council in which they are at present partially represented. But such reform must be limited by a due attention to the settled institutions of the country, without embarking in any sudden change, which will only tend to embarrass or to destroy. It is not necessary for me to say more on this subject, my present object being to make such a statement as will tend to restore the confidence of the people, without unsettling any thing essential to the constitution. I am only anxious to guard myself from being considered favourable to that wild scheme, which, if carried into effect, will, instead of re-establishing confidence, produce collision and counteraction :—a scheme which I will neither propose nor support ; and which I will be the last man to advocate. I will now advert to the subject of taxation ; and I say that every reduction of unnecessary expenditure shall be effected. The necessary expenditure only shall be maintained ; and all which is not essential, shall be cut off with an unsparing hand. Every reduction consistent with the public service and the maintenance of public credit, shall be effected with diligence and without delay. With respect to what has recently taken place in other countries, I will say, that the due policy of this kingdom, so long as it can be honourably acted on, is non-interference. It will be my care, as I am convinced it was that of the preceding government, to maintain a proper understanding and perfect harmony with our allies. With a view to any disturbances that may take place,

I hope that the government of France will be administered in a true spirit of conciliation ; for between two such governments, acting on the broad principle of general security and the public good, there ought to be union, and there ought to be an abstinence from interference with other countries, and from all objects and views of aggrandizement and ambition, by which the peace of the world may be endangered. In conclusion, as a summary, I will declare, that the principles on which the new administration is formed, are an amelioration of abuses,—a system of rigid economy, and every possible endeavour to preserve peace consistently with the honour of the country.

LORD WHARNCLIFFE,

On Earl Grey's acceptance of Office, 1830.

It is now too late for any ministry to offer effectual opposition to the general demand for reform. The question now is, what plan of reform it will be most expedient to adopt. I fully approve of the declaration made by the noble earl, that he will, in effecting a reform, preserve inviolate the monarchy and the established institutions of the country ; and whenever the measure is brought before us, I shall be prepared to give him my cordial support. The next subject in importance to that of reform, is the state of our foreign relations ; and I rejoice to hear that every effort, compatible with the character and honour of the country, will be made to preserve peace, for I am satisfied that there is not any point on which the honest and sound portion of the community are more earnest than to avoid all unnecessary warlike interference with foreign states. I am disposed to support the noble earl in his plans of retrenchment, so far as is compatible with the interest of existing establishments ; but I hope the noble earl and his friends will not permit themselves to be lured into any measures for the purpose of obtaining popular applause, which will only serve as an ignis fatuis, to lead them to destruction. I hope that the firmness and consistency of the noble earl will enable me to give his administration my full support, and that nothing will arise to excite unnecessary opposition.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL,

On Reform, 1831.

It is unnecessary to repeat the arguments in favour of making a change in our system of representation; but I shall briefly state the principal grounds on which the reformers risk their case. In the first place, the ancient constitution of the country, in accordance with the principle that what concerns all should be judged of by all, says in express terms—that all laws in England are made by consent of the whole commonality of the realm of England. In the next place, the same language is used in the statute, de tallagio non concedendo, the legality of which is unquestionable. This consent of the whole commonality, or as it is styled in another statute, of all the freemen of the realm of England, was given by them at a very early period of our history, by means of their representatives in parliament. At that early period of parliamentary history, we find that about one hundred and twenty boroughs sent representatives constantly to parliament, whilst others sent them only occasionally, according as their importance and wealth sunk or fell in the country. There cannot, however, be a doubt but that at an early period of our history, representation in parliament was considered as a right of all the people of England. The representation, as it exists at present, is not an actual and real representation of the people of England; and representation being a question of right, it is clear that reformers have right on their side. If then from the ancient constitution of parliament we go to that which is recent, it will appear impossible for us to remain with the constitution in its present condition. The confidence formerly reposed in this house, is now completely gone. We are convinced that no partial measure, no trifling or paltry reform can give stability to the throne, strength to the parliament, or satisfaction to the country. Let us examine what the complaints of the people are. The chief grievances they complain of are, first, the nomination of members to this house by individuals: secondly, the election of members by close corporations: and thirdly, the expence of elections. In ancient times, I believe, every freeman, which then meant every householder in the town, was competent to vote at the election of a member of parliament. But they possessed this right to the exclusion of villains and strangers, and, therefore, they were a peculiar body of persons. That they possessed property to a certain extent, is manifest from the fact that they defrayed the charges of those members whom they sent to parliament. By this bill the number of votes will be increased half a million, of people who will be connected with the property of the country; having themselves a valuable stake in the country, deeply interested in preserving and promoting its interests, and upon whom we can depend in any future struggle which the country may have to sustain to support this house, the parliament, and the throne, in bringing that struggle to a successful termination. Such a measure will tend to the moral and political improvement of the people, and will give the greatest possible incitement to industry and good conduct: for when a man finds that he is rated for a certain rate, which gives him the privilege of voting for a certain representative in parliament, it will be evidently both prudent and politic to preserve his character unimpaired amongst his neighbours and in the face of his country. Whatever may be the result of the propositions I have made, I must say that his majesty's ministers will feel that they have thoroughly done their duty in bringing the measure forward; and I have a right to say, that in submitting the present proposition to this house, they have evinced an interest for the future welfare of the country. They think that what they have proposed is the only thing calculated to give permanence to the constitution, which has so long been the admiration of foreign nations, on account of its free and popular spirit. By these means the house will show to the world that it is determined no longer to be an assembly of the representatives of small classes and particular interests; but that it is resolved to form a body of men who represent the people, who spring from the people, who have sympathies with the people; and who can fairly call upon the people to support their burdens in the future struggles and difficulties of the country, on the ground that those who ask them for that support are joining heart and hand with them, and, like themselves, are seeking only the glory and welfare of England.

SIR ROBERT PEEL,

On the Same.

The late illustrious Mr. Canning said that the modelling of a constitution was a matter of extreme delicacy, in proportion to the complicated character of so delicate a machine. Who can pretend to judge of the symmetry and proportions of the human frame, of its organs and faculties, and endowments, which fall little short of angelic existence itself, by merely examining an isolated member. Let honourable gentlemen remember that all moral theorists and philosophical writers, for a thousand years, have despaired of realising in practice a system of such excellence as the British constitution. Has not Tacitus himself described the best and most durable government to be a combination of king, nobles, and people, particularising with accuracy the several parts of our constitution as it now operates: and is this system which works so advantageously for the general weal, which fosters talent and statesmanlike ability, to be destroyed? During one hundred and fifty years the constitution, in its present form, has been in force: and I will ask if the experience of history has produced any form of government so calculated to promote the happiness and secure the rights and liberties of a free and enlightened people. All the reasons which have been urged for making this change are, that it is necessary to conciliate public opinion. No better way of conciliating the public will has been devised than that of adding half a million electors to the constituency of the country. But if that be a good way of conciliating public opinion, then if another government, wishing to participate in the popular favour, should add another million to the constituent body, that argument must be entitled to the same success. No practical advantage can arise to the country from this change in the constitution of the house of commons. Let us, therefore, remain content with the well tempered freedom which we now enjoy, and which we have the means of securing if we act with ordinary discretion. I lament exceedingly the agitation of the question of reform at this particular crisis: for depend upon it that, by this process, the first seeds of discontent and disunion are sown throughout this land. In every town there will be a moral conflict between the possessors of existing authorities, and existing privileges, and those to whom the existing authority and the existing privileges are to be transferred. Oh, sir, I lament beyond measure that government have not adhered to that temperate policy which they have pursued elsewhere. I lament that, if they did think it necessary to propose a plan of reform in this excited state of the public mind, they did not confine it within those narrow limits which are consistent with the dignity of the country, and the dignity of their own characters. They have thought proper, however, to adopt another course: they have sent through the land the firebrand of agitation. It is easy so far to imitate the giant enemy of the Philistines as to send three hundred firebrands through the country, carrying danger and dismay in every quarter; but it is not easy to find a remedy when the evil is committed. In the present difficulties of our situation, we should have the power of summoning all the energies of life; and should take care that we do not signalize our own destruction, by bowing down the pillars of the edifice of our liberty, which, with all its imperfections, still contains the noblest society of freemen known to the habitable world.

APPENDIX.

THE GENERAL ELECTION,

JULY, 1841.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1841.

The Imperial Parliament of the United Kingdom was this day prorogued by Her Majesty in person.

The Queen, attended by Prince Albert, left Buckingham Palace in the state carriage, drawn by eight beautiful cream-coloured horses, shortly before two o'clock. Her Majesty and her illustrious Consort were loudly cheered by the assembled thousands, as they passed through the Park and along Parliament street.

The doors of the House of Lords were thrown open at twelve o'clock for the admission of those who had obtained orders from the Lord Great Chamberlain. Shortly after one o'clock the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, attended by their suites, arrived, and were conducted to the usual seats set apart for them. The Peers and Peeresses were early in their attendance.

Her Majesty's entrance to the House was announced by a flourish of trumpets. The Peers and Peeresses immediately rose and remained standing until the Queen had taken her seat on the Throne, and desired their Lordships to be seated.

The Lord Chancellor, by Her Majesty's command, directed Sir Augustus Clifford, Usher of the Black Rod, to summon the House of Commons to hear the Royal Speech on the prorogation of Parliament.

Her Majesty having given her assent to several bills, in a clear and distinct tone of voice read the following most gracious Speech:—

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

On a full consideration of the present state of public affairs, I have come to the determination of proroguing this parliament, with a view to as early and complete a solution.

“The paramount importance of the trade and industry of the country, and my anxiety that the exigencies of the public service be provided for in the manner least burdensome to the community, have induced me to resort to the means which the Constitution has intrusted to me of ascertaining the sense of my people upon matters which so deeply concern their welfare.

“I entertain the hope that the progress of public business may be facilitated, and that divisions injurious to the cause of steady policy and useful legislation may be removed by the authority of a new parliament, which I shall direct to be summoned without delay.

“GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

“I thank you for the readiness with which you have voted the sums necessary for the civil and military establishments.

“MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

“In the exercise of my prerogative I can have no other object than that of securing the rights and promoting the interests of my subjects. and I rely on the co-operation of my parliament and the loyal zeal of my people for support in the adoption of such measures as are necessary to maintain that high station among the nations of the world which it has pleased Divine Providence to assign to this country.”

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY.

BY THE QUEEN.

A PROCLAMATION FOR DISSOLVING THE PRESENT PARLIAMENT, AND DECLARING THE CALLING OF ANOTHER.

VICTORIA, R.

Whereas we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, to dissolve the present Parliament, which stands prorogued to Tuesday the 29th day of this instant June; we do for that end publish this our Royal Proclamation, and do hereby dissolve the said Parliament accordingly, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Knights

Citizens, and Burgesses, and the Commissioners for Shires and Burghs, of the House of Commons, are discharged from their meeting and attendance on the said Tuesday the 29th day of this instant June. And we, being desirous and resolved, as soon as may be, to meet our people, and to have their advice in Parliament, do hereby make known to all our loving subjects our Royal will and pleasure to call a new Parliament; and do hereby further declare, that, with the advice of our Privy Council, we have given order that our Chancellor of that part of our United Kingdom called Great Britain, and our Chancellor of Ireland, do respectively, upon notice thereof, forthwith issue our writs in due form and according to law, for calling a new Parliament. And we do hereby also, by this our Royal Proclamation, under our great seal of our United Kingdom, require writs forthwith to be issued accordingly by our said Chancellors respectively, for causing the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, who are to serve in the said Parliament, to be duly returned to, and give their attendance in, our said Parliament; which writs are to be returnable on Thursday the 19th day of August next.

Given at our Court at Buckingham Palace, this 22nd day of June, 1841, and in the fifth year of our Reign.
